By way of beginning I summoned Maignan and put him through a severe examination. Later, I sent for the rest of my household—such, I mean, as had accompanied me—and, ranging them against the walls of my chamber, took a flambeau in my hand and went the round of them, questioning each, and marking his air and aspect as he answered. But with no result; so that after following some clews to no purpose, and suspecting several persons who cleared themselves on the spot, I became assured that the chain must be taken up at the other end, and the first link found among Mme. de Verneuil's following.

By this time it was nearly midnight, and my people were dropping with fatigue. Nevertheless, a sense of the desperate nature of the case animating them, they formed themselves voluntarily into a kind of council, all feeling their probity attacked, in which various modes of forcing the secret from those who held it were proposed—Maignan's suggestions being especially violent. Doubting, however, whether madame had more than one confidante, I secretly made up my mind to a course which none dared to suggest; and then, dismissing all to bed, kept only Maignan to lie in my chamber, that if any points occurred to me in the night I might question him on them.

At four o'clock I called him, and bade him go out and quietly saddle two horses. This done, I slipped out myself without arousing anyone, and, mounting at the stables, took the Orleans road through the forest. My plan was to strike at the head, and, surprising Mme. de Verneuil while the event still hung uncertain, to wrest the secret from her by trick or threat. The enterprise was desperate, for I knew the stubbornness and arrogance of the woman, and the inveterate enmity which she entertained towards me, more particularly since the king's marriage. But in a dangerous case any remedy is welcome.

I reached Malesherbes, where madame was residing with her parents, a little before seven o'clock, and riding without disguise to the chateau demanded to see her. She was not yet risen, and the servants, whom my appearance threw into the utmost confusion, objected this to me; but I knew that the excuse was no real one, and answered roughly that I came from the king, and must see her. This opened all doors, and in a moment I found myself in her chamber. She was sitting up in bed, clothed in an elegant nighttrail, and seemed in no wise surprised to see me. On the contrary, she greeted me with a smile and a taunting word, and omitted nothing that might evince her disdain or hurt my dignity. She let me advance without offering me a chair; and when, after saluting her, I looked about for one, I found that all the seats except one very low stool had been removed from the room.

This was so like her that it did not astonish me, and I baffled her malice by leaning against the wall. "This is no ordinary honor—from M. de Rosny!" she said, flouting me with her eyes.

"I come on no ordinary mission, madame," I said, as gravely as I could.

"Mercy!" she exclaimed in a mocking tone. "I should have put on new ribbons, I suppose!"

"From the king, madame," I continued, not allowing myself to be moved, "to inquire how you obtained possession of his cipher."

She laughed loudly. "Good, simple king," she said, "to ask what he knows already!"

"He does not know, madame," I answered, severely.

"What?" she cried, in affected surprise. "When he gave it to me himself!"

"He did not, madame."

"He did, sir!" she retorted, firing up. "Or if he did not, prove it—prove it. And, by the way," she continued, lowering her voice again and reverting to her former tone of spiteful badinage, "how is the dear queen? I heard that she was indisposed yesterday and kept the king in attendance all day. So unfortunate, you know, just at this time." And her eyes twinkled with malicious amusement.

"Madame," I said, "may I speak plainly to you?"

"I never heard that you could speak otherwise," she answered, quickly. "Even his friends never called M. de Rosny a wit; but only a plain, rough man who served our royal turn well enough in rough times, but is now growing—"

"Madam!"

"A trifle exigeant and superfluous."

After that I saw that it was war to the knife between us; and I asked her in very plain terms if she were not afraid of the queen's enmity, that she dared thus to flaunt the king's favors before her.

"No more than I am afraid of yours," she answered, hardily.

"But if the king is disappointed in his hopes?"

"You may suffer; very probably will," she answered, slowly and smiling; "not I. Besides, sir—my child was born dead. He bore that very well."

"Yet, believe me, madame, you run some risk."

"In keeping what the king has given me?" she answered, raising her eyebrows.

"No! In keeping what the king has not given you!" I answered, sternly. "Whereas, what do you gain?"

"Well," she replied, raising herself in bed, while her eyes sparkled and her color rose. "if you like, I will tell you. This pleasure, for one thing—the pleasure of seeing you there, awkward, booted, stained, and standing, waiting my will. That—which perhaps you call a pretty thing—I gain first of all. Then I gain your ruin, M. de Rosny; I plant a sting in that woman's breast; and for his majesty, he has made his bed and may lie on it."

"Have a care, madame!" I cried, bursting with indignation at a speech so shameless and disloyal. "You are playing a dangerous game, I warn you!"

"And what game have you played?" she replied, transported on a sudden with equal passion. "Who was it tore up the promise of marriage which the king gave me? Who was it prevented me being queen of France? Who was it hurried on the match with this tradeswoman, so that the king found himself wedded before he knew it? Who was it—but enough; enough!" she cried, interrupting herself with a gesture full of rage. "You have ruined me, you and your queen between you, and I will ruin you!"

"On the contrary, madame," I answered, collecting myself for a last effort, and speaking with all the severity which a just indignation inspired, "I have not ruined you. But if you do not tell me that which I am here to learn—I will!"

She laughed out loud. "Oh, you simpleton!" she said. "And you call yourself a statesman! Do you not see that if I do not tell it, you are disgraced yourself and powerless, and can do me no harm? Tell it you? When I have you all on the hip—you, the king, the queen! Not for a million crowns, M. de Rosny!"

"And that is your answer, madame?" I said, choking with rage. It had been long since any had dared so to beard me.

"Yes," she replied stoutly; "it is! Or, stay; you shall not go empty handed." And thrusting her arm under the pillow she drew out, after a moment's search, a small packet which she held out towards me. "Take it!" she said, with a taunting laugh. "It has served my turn. What the king gave me, I give you."

Seeing that it was the missing key to the cipher, I swallowed my rage and took it; and being assured by this time that I could effect nothing by staying longer, but should only expose myself to fresh insults, I turned on my heel, with rudeness equal to her own, and, without taking leave of her, flung the door open and went out. I heard her throw herself back with a shrill laugh of triumph. But as, the moment the door fell to behind me, my thoughts began to cast about for another way of escape—this failing—I took little heed of her, and less of the derisive looks to which the household, quickly taking the cue, treated me as I passed. I flung myself into the saddle and galloped off, followed by Maignan, who presently, to my surprise, blurted out a clumsy word of congratulation.

I turned on him in amazement, and, swearing at him, asked him what he meant.

"You have got it," he said, timidly, pointing to the packet which I mechanically held in my hand.

"And to what purpose?" I cried, glad of this opportunity of unloading some of my wrath. "I want, not the paper, but the secret, fool! You may have the paper for yourself if you will tell me how madame got it."

Nevertheless, his words led me to look at the packet. I opened it, and, having satisfied myself that it contained the original and not a copy, was putting it up again when my eyes fell on a small spot of blood which marked one corner of the cover. It was not larger than a grain of corn, but it awoke, first, a vague association and then a memory, which as I rode grew stronger and more definite, until, on a sudden, discovery flashed upon me—and the truth.

HER ONE REGRET.

It Was That She Had Missed Hearing a Hand-Organ Play.

Nantucket people delight to tell the story of an old resident of that quaint island who confessed to a single regret—no more. Her family had lived for generations in the same house, and beside its old-fashioned hospitable fireplace she spent the greater part of her life, except in warm weather, knitting famous stockings and telling old time stories to anyone who cared to listen.

She was such a picture of peace and contentment, and her stories were so full of happy reminiscence untouched by any sense of what many people would have called the narrowness and bareness of her life, that a chance visitor was one day moved to ask: "Haven't you a single regret in your life? Is there nothing you would have liked that has not come to you?"

"Yes, my dear," replied the old lady, dropping her work for a moment, "there is one thing. Fifteen years ago, before my sister died, a man with a hand-organ came here one day, by the steamer. Folks say he played just beautifully; and my sister tried to persuade me to go down to the corner and see him and his instrument.

"Well, I didn't feel just like going, some way or other, and I didn't go. But she went, and she said it was just splendid.

"I try not to think about it any more than I can help," said the old lady, "and there are days when I almost forget about it. But I suppose really, if I were to tell the truth," she added, after a moment, with a little smile, "I do suppose that I shall regret not hearing that hand-organ, off and on, as long as I live!"—Youth's Companion.

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

TWO FATHERS PRESENTED.

Grand Jury Censures the Carelessness of Parents in Permitting Children to Play with Firearms.

Following is the full text of the two Plainfield presentments reported briefly in The Daily Press yesterday:

The grand inquest for the State of New Jersey, and for the body of the County of Union, upon their respective oath and affirmation,

Present, that during our investigation touching the death of Harold Greenleaf, we ascertained that the rifle from which the fatal shot was fired was owned by a fourteen-year-old boy named William Morgan; that his father, Lucius D. Morgan, was fully cognizant of the fact that his son had and was using the gun; that other small boys were in the habit of playing with the Morgan boy when this gun was in his presence.

We present Lucius D. Morgan as derelict in his duty as a parent in permitting this child to own and use so dangerous a weapon; indirectly he is as much to blame for the death of the boy as was the Rocap lad who fired the shot, for had he forbidden its use by his own son, the Rocap boy could not have had it on that fatal day.

The grand inquest for the State of New Jersey and for the body of the county of Union, upon their respective oath and affirmation, Present, That we discovered, during our investigation touching the death of Harold Greenleaf, that Charles E. McDonald of Plainfield had purchased for and was allowing his son, Samuel McDonald, (a child of but eight years of age), to use a rifle in and about his neighborhood; we further found that the said McDonald entertained and freely expressed the opinion that this child was fit to be allowed to use this weapon.

We, therefore, present said Charles E. McDonald for carelessness in the premises, and, likewise, for violating the laws of this State in that he sold to one William Morgan, (another child), the very rifle with which the Greenleaf boy was killed.

We cannot too strongly condemn his action in thus placing in the hands of two children these deadly weapons.

Thigh Fractured at 75.

An exceedingly unfortunate accident happened to Isaac Smalley of 333 East Front street yesterday morning about 11:30. He was busily engaged in the rear of his yard, gathering up the limb of a tree which he had cut down the day previous, and, stepping on a piece of ice, he fell heavily to the ground. He was carried into the house, a piece of carpet being used as a stretcher, and Drs. Hedges and Tomlinson were called. On examination they found that his right leg about three inches below the upper joint was broken completely. They set the bone, and Mr. Smalley passed a fairly comfortable. It is hoped that he will soon be able to get around again, though he is 75 years old, and the bone is not likely to knit very rapidly.

Snarls of the Discontented.

(From The Bound Brook Chronicle.)

The brilliant editor of the Plainfield Press is highly complimentary to about one hundred newspaper men in New Jersey. Several journalists having secured positions at Trenton, the Press takes occasion to say that "all the bright Republican editors have now been rewarded by an appreciative Legislature". Thanks, awfully!

[From The Plainfield Courier-News.]

A writer in the Atlantic Monthly gravely asserts that "ten minutes is time enough to devote to the reading of any newspaper". This is a recklessly prodigal estimate so far as it may refer to our North avenue contemporary. Ten seconds is a liberal allowance there.

AMERICAN TALKS.

Gives His Authorities for Desertion Statistics.

CALLS THEM ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Imagines Mr. Finn Questioning Scholars on the Line of Christian Doctrine, and Makes Sensational Suggestions of Propositions for Finn to Disprove.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—American is again accused, this time by P. J. Finn, in choice catholic epithet, of having originated the desertion statistics. The following editorial, from The Citizen, of Boston, throws an electric light on the whole matter:

THOSE DESERTION STATISTICS.

A friend writes from Auburn, Me., in regard to those statistics of Irish desertions from the Union army. He says a half-witted individual in that city accuses The Citizen of originating them.

We would inform our friend that we took them from the (Roman Catholic Irish) New York Sun of August 30, 1891, and from the (Roman Catholic Irish) Boston Globe of September 27, 1891. They can be seen in the files of those papers indicated.

We have also stated how the figures were compiled—not by the War Department, nor by any other department, but by well known employees of the Government at Washington, for their own use. We have also stated that they have never been disputed in the Pension Department, nor by pension agents in Washington, until the present administration, and copies have been sent out direct from pension officials in Washington. The statistics of desertions from regiments in which there were any number of Irishmen, will corroborate the figures of the Sun and Globe. We gave those desertions from the Massachusetts regiments in a recent issue. American gladly concedes that there were exceptional cases of splendid Irish bravery—all honor to the brave, but "drat" Wilbere's "buncombe." American said in the "reply to Tettemer," that all the official war records are not at Washington. There are official State records, from which the personnel of any regiment may be had, as in Massachusetts. Now Col. Ainsworth knew all these facts, or he didn't know them. If he knew them then he falsified in the letter he sent to The Press. If he didn't know them, then the Ainsworth letter is not worth the paper it is written on. Furthermore, it is the motto of the New York paper, "If you see it in the Sun, it's so." Even little Paddy Finn in his epistle, quotes the Sun as an authority. Suppose Ainsworth, Tettemer and Finn, tell the editor of the New York Sun, "that he is a sneaking cur and liar for originating," and printing first, that table of desertions. Suppose Ainsworth and Tettemer tell Mr. Dana that "he is a cur-dog to stir up strife in a peaceful community." Go on, gentlemen, wrestle with the New York Sun for printing "malicious, damnable falsehoods, about a most respectable portion of the community." Is it like Mr. Dana, or the Sun, under Catholic control, to originate, or print such a tale? or the Boston Globe, also under Catholic control, to reprint such a table of comparisons, if it were not true? American prefers to believe the Sun, rather than Ainsworth, U. S. A. American puts the Sun, Globe and The Citizen, against the Ainsworth-Tettemer combination, while he still affirms, "facts count."

Now for little Paddy Finn. American read his sublimely absurd argument against the utility of the Public School; and Paddy says it 's documentary too! After such an array of colossal facts against the Public School, American gravely calls upon the Mayor, and Plainfield Board of Education, to immediately transform our schools into parochial institutions. Enough said on this point.

Mr. Finn also stated that "It would be interesting to have the answers of those bright graduates to a few questions in Christian doctrine." As nothing outside of Catholicity is Christian, of course Mr. Finn meant the kind of doctrines taught in the church and parochial school. ("The following questions and answers in catechetical form, are a concise digest of Catholic principles. Neither Romish priest, nor layman, can dispute their authenticity, for they are indisputable. Let it be understood, that the questions proposed catechetically are our own, while the answers are correct translations from the standard works, text-books, and canon law of the Romish Church".—Editor, Detroit American). And these are a few of the alleged Christian doctrines, which Mr. Finn would have taught in the public schools, which are now so inferior to the parochial schools where these doctrines maintain. Imagine Paddy Finn questioning one of his bright scholars: "Is a Roman Catholic bound in honor to bear truthful witness in a court of law?" Answer: "Not unless the interests of the church demand it. The same rule applies to the witness as to the judge, and for the same reasons."

Mr. Finn: "Have you any authorities to substantiate your assertion?" Answer: "Lessius, Bonar and Trall assert, that, 'if anyone has sworn before a Judge to keep the truth, he is not obliged to say secret things; it is certain, and the opinion of all theologians, that for good reasons one may be permitted to use equivocations, and to maintain them by oath; and by good reasons 'we mean all that can do good to the body or soul.'" (Liguori, Sal., No. 109, and vol. Sauch) "Where is killing not murder?" Answer: "He who kills one that is excommunicated, is no murderer in a legal sense." (Canon Law, Article XV. See Canon Law part 2) "How are you to receive the teachings of the church?" Answer: "That we may in all things attain the truth, that we may not err in anything, we ought ever to hold, as a fixed principle, that what I see white I believe to be black, if the spiritual authorities define it to be so." (spiritual exercise by Loyola) "Is stealing ever permissible?" Answer: "Stealing is always a sin when the theft tends to bring the church into disrepute; it is not sinful to steal in order that the church may be benefited thereby, or to steal from necessity; neither is it a sin to steal from one whom the act does not impoverish. Thus: He, who in taking what is another's doth him no injury, is not obliged to make restitution" (St. Aphoris, Furtum, cap 6, page 292) "What are the church's relations toward a Protestant government?" Answer: "Every heretic and Protestant is condemned to death, and every oath of allegiance to a government which is Protestant or heretic is abrogated." (Council of Lateran held A. D. 1215) Again: A man who has been excommunicated by the Pope, may be killed anywhere, as Escober and Deaux teach, because the Pope has an indirect jurisdiction over the whole world, even in temporal things". (Busenbaum, Lacroi, Theologia, Moralis, 1757) "Name one sin that is not mortal' Answer, "It is not a mortal sin for parents to wish the death of their children, nor to desire the death of anyone who troubles the church, because considerable good is the direct and immediate object" (Xavier, Fegeli, Quest-prac. pass 4, cap 1, quest 7, num 8, p 285). "But may it not be inferred, that the authorities quoted, being in some cases of old date, have become obsolete like Protestant writings?" Answer: "Not under any circumstances. The Roman church is infallible, and cannot err. What was sound doctrine 300 years ago is sound doctrine today. The authors quoted are still text-books in Catholic theological colleges. Besides Pope St. Agatho, and Gregory 16th in his encyclical letter to the bishops and clergy in the U. S. and elsewhere (1832) says: "From what has been regularly defined (doctrine and discipline of the church) nothing can be taken away, no innovation introduced there, no addition made; but it must be preserved untouched, both as to words and meaning." Now, for lack of space, Mr. Finn will dismiss his bright parochial class in "Catholic Christian doctrine" until our next letter. But as Mr. Finn has succeeded to the estate left him by Wilbere & Tettemer, I will ask him, because he claims to be familiar with documentary evidence, to produce documentary rebuttal, that the Pope did not hold secret correspondence with Jefferson Davis; that the man who fired the first gun of the war on the flag was not a Romanist; that the assassin of Lincoln was not a Romanist; that Chiniquy does not tell the truth about that plot. While waiting for the long-coming rebuttals, I am, AMERICAN.

"Whippin' the Cat."

An old resident in speaking of ye olden times with a Daily Press reporter last evening said he distinctly remembered when his father sheared the wool from the sheep and brought the same to Boonton, Morris County, where it was woven into cloth. The cloth was then taken home and the peripatetic tailor, who usually called once a year, would make the cloth into clothes, remaining meanwhile with the farmer's family. The clothes did not fit as snugly as Harry Werner makes them, but they did fit a trifle better than a shirt does a bean pole. That was called "Whippin' the cat". Shoemakers did their business likewise.

All Necessities of Life and Death, in One Borough Block.

There is a business block in North Plainfield where you can buy a farm and all the necessary appliances thereto, and in said block you may also purchase flour, feed, and in fact everything to sustain life, while you await the prospective crop. If it proves a failure, and illness overtakes you, you can also secure the services of a doctor; and should death claim you as a victim there is near at hand, a friendly grave digger, and an undertaker.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

FELICITOUS INSTALLATION.

Grand Army Men, Women, and Sons Have a Happy Night.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., were guests of the Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, last evening, when the president-elect, Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, was installed. Past President Mrs. Mary Morse performed the interesting ceremony in a very creditable manner, after which Mrs. Andrew Cox as chairman of the entertainment committee presided and furnished an evening of pleasure to all.

The first selection was entitled "A Millionaire", and was admirably sung by Mrs. George Pope, Mrs. A. E. Dawe, Eli Odam and George Pope, Jr. Mr. Hyman was accompanist.

A recitation by Try Mattox was heartily received, and she responded with a very amusing selection. An enjoyable vocal solo by Eli Odam preceded one of W. C. Smith's select solos, which brought down the house.

W. R. Mattox was called on for a recitation, and he responded in his usual happy style, and Mrs. Morse, after earnest solicitation, recited "Romeo and Juliet" much to everyone's enjoyment.

Then came speeches from Commander Coriell, Past Commanders W. C. Smith and M. C. Dobbins, and V. W. Nash, H. C. McVoy, Edward Morse, Willard Sutton and President Mrs. Dobbins, all of which were given in a happy manner and brought forth much enthusiasm. Past Department Chaplain Mrs. Lacy of Rahway was present and stirred the hearts of all as she recited deeds of patriotism with which the veterans were acquainted.

Miss Pound of Aaron Wilkes Corps of Trenton was also a guest. After all had contributed their share towards the evening's entertainment, the company was invited to the room below, where excellent refreshments were served and a jolly good time was indulged in.

In Honor of Their Poet.

The anniversary of Burns, the poet, was made a very enjoyable affair last night, celebrated at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Lindsay of West Front street. A most bountiful supper was spread for the guests, prominent on the table being the Haggis, Scotland's national dish, and suitable for the occasion. After the inner-man had been amply seen to, the evening was spent in song and recitations, the host opening with "There was a lad was born in Kyle"; others contributed to the evening's enjoyment, which made another of those annual entertainments pass with so much pleasure, as to live green in the memory of their guests, who came from New York, New Market and this city to the number of eighteen, and broke up in "the wee sma' hours" with "Auld Lang Syne", and a merry toast to the generous host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay.

Wanted—More Philips.

The largest audience yet attending Grace M. E. Church during the revival service, gathered last night and listened to an excellent sermon by the pastor, Mr. Randolph, who set forth forcibly the necessity of personal service. The subject was the conversion of Nathaniel. Here was a man whose heart was right. Christ pronounced him guileless. But he needed to know the truth about the Messiah. When that was presented to him, he accepted it. More Philips are wanted to go out and seek men and show them the Christ. In the after-service, both men and women gathered at the altar, and sang, prayed, and testified.

No meeting will be held tonight, but evangelistic services will be held Sunday.

Hatter Laing's Surprise Party.

Last evening shortly after 9 a friend called on E. M. Laing, the Park avenue furnisher and men's outfitter, and offered him a large case of valuables if he would step to the door and assist in carrying them into the store. Somewhat surprised, Mr. Laing stepped to the door, expecting of course some practical joke, but found that there was a case of valuables too large for one man to handle, so, lending a hand, he assisted in lifting it into the store. Not waiting to hear the profuse thanks of the merchant at being so kindly remembered, Policeman Cooney continued on his beat. The case belonged to Jeweler Collier, whose store had been closed for the night.

Will kind friends send contributions to Mrs. J. K. Myers, 139 East Seventh street, so that the boxes may be sent?. "He gives twice, who gives quickly."

Avert Trouble.

Troubles come upon us unawares, but we may prevent their growth by timely action; at the first symptom of waning sight, for instance, you may avert a permanent weakness of the eyes by prompt consultation of a skilled optician such as you will find at Collier's, 103 Park avenue, where examinations are free, and reliable advice given that will insure you against the evil consequences of neglect.

Trolley Road Building.

The trolley road company has begun work in a preliminary way between Bound Brook and Somerville. Poles are being placed in position, and some filling in is being done preparatory to building bridges. The right of way has now been obtained from Raritan to Dunellen and from Bound Brook to Trenton, with the single exception of the borough of Princeton.

The citizens of Somerville have voted to extend the corporation limits, thereby taking in all the territory east to the boundary lines of Finderne. The desire on the part of Somerville to embrace more territory within the corporation limits is good evidence of the rapid growth of the town.

—W. S. Chase has completed the elegant interior decorations in the Woodland avenue house of Alfred Cocks.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; your price 45c and 90c

Minature Washout.

Boehm, the Front street dry goods merchant, met with misfortune this morning by being flooded with snow water from his one story flat roof in the rear of the building. Last night's snow stopped the tube hole of the roof drain pipes and when the heavy rain came the water rose on the roof until it had gone over the six inch "counter flushing" which is against the brick wall of the main building and so leaked down to the floor below, covering it in some places with three or four inches of water.

The damage would have been much worse had the storm occured earlier in the evening.

THE STATE OF TRADE

No Marked Improvement in the Situation.

Small Volume of Business, Low Prices and a Conservative Outlook for the Future—Little More Activity in Bar and Pig Iron and Steel Rails.

New York, Jan. 26.—Reports to Bradstreet from the more important distributing centres fail to reveal any marked improvement in the movement of merchandise and products, and the conclusion is forced that the general trade situation remains as previously characterized—by small volume, low prices, hand-to-mouth sales, and the outlook favoring a very conservative trade for some time to come.

Gains in demand have been noteworthy only at eastern woolen mills for men's-wear fabrics, among Providence manufacturing jewelers, wholesale dealers in staples at Augusta, Memphis and New Orleans, and, in the west and northwest, at St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Paul and Minneapolis only, improvement being rather by contrast with recent dullness than with the volume of trade ordinarily transacted at this season. An exception is in wool sales, which have increased sharply, though prices are no higher.

None of the larger eastern cities report a likelihood of demand to anticipate wants; on the contrary, all indications are for a continuance of orders for nearby wants only. Philadelphia textile mills are dissatisfied with the situation and the outlook, but Baltimore jobbers say trade is fairly satisfactory.

At the south collections are slow in South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia. More interest is manifested by patrons of Richmond jobbers, and Charleston and Savannah respectively report fertilizers and naval stores more active.

There is a little more activity in bar and pig iron and steel rails at Chicago and St. Louis, but general trade at the former is otherwise as quiet as heretofore. At the latter city orders for millinery, dry goods and shoes are larger, and it is stated American tinplates are preferred to Welsh, as the latter are being cheapened at the expense of quality. Omaha's reduced volume of business is due in part to unfavorable weather, but at St. Paul the volume of orders received for January is declared larger than in 1894. At most cities reported the situation is marked by quiet.

Bank clearings' totals aggregate $917,000,000 for the past six business days, a moderate decrease as compared with the previous week, about one-tenth heavier than in the like week one year ago. Prices of staple articles support a tendency toward improvement. Wool, leather, hides, lumber, sugar, rosin, hogs, Bessemer pig and steel billets and rails are reported firmly held, although the Philadelphia iron market shows signs of weakness. The falling off in ginghams has been recovered, but declines remain in quotations for pork, cotton, corn and oats.

Business failures in the United States this week continue heavy in number, 312 against 378 last week, 338 in the week one year ago, 302 two years ago and 249 three years ago. Exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States this week amount to 2,840,000 bushels.

The dull resistance which prices in the New York speculative stock market offer to the heavy gold shipments and rapid shrinking of the treasury gold reserve would indicate a belief that if matters come to a crisis relief is more likely to be obtained. There has been some liquidation in the stocks of properties subject to reorganization and on which heavy assessments are anticipated. Apart from this, however, the bears still find a great difficulty in dislodging stocks. Some selling of investment securities is reported for European account.

General trade in the Dominion of Canada continues of moderate proportions. Toronto professes to find the outlook for business fairly satisfactory, but at Montreal no such prospect is in view at this time, while collections are slow and spring goods are being ordered more slowly than one year ago. Halifax announces some little encouragement in trade circles, with a moderate sorting-up business.

British Steamer Lost.

London, Jan. 26.—Severe storms prevailed over all the coasts of Great Britain, France and Holland. In Scotland the fall of snow has been particularly heavy. A fishing boat belonging to Dunbar, with a crew of seven men on board, has been lost, and off Port Heath, Cornwall, the British steamship Escurial, owned at Glasgow, with a crew of fourteen men, has gone down.

A Jury for Debs.

Chicago, Jan. 26.—The Debs jury has been secured and the trial will formally open to-day. The jury consists of eight farmers, one insurance agent, one real estate agent, one dealer in agricultural implements and one painter and decorator. Not a single juryman is from Chicago or Cook county.

The Encyclical in Trouble.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Pope Leo's long expected encyclical, extending the power and dignity of Mgr. Satolli and defining the status of the American church, is now suspended between New York and Washington by the formalities of the customs office. It is expected, however, that it will reach here to-day.

EYES ON WASHINGTON

More Heavy Withdrawals on the Gold Reserve.

Over Thirteen Million Dollars Taken from the Treasury During the Past Week, Making the Gold Balance $56,724,000—Another Bond Issue Expected Next Week.

New York, Jan. 26.—The gold withdrawn from the sub-treasury and assay office yesterday aggregated $6,900,000, including $1,500,000 in bullion taken from the assay office, $1,000,000 of which was deposited in the Mercantile Safe Deposit company for shipment next week and $500,000 of which went to Merchants' National bank. The premium paid for the bars was one-eighth of 1 per cent. There will be shipped on the English and French steamships sailing to-day $7,200,000 gold, making a total of $7,700,000 exports for the week. The total amount of gold withdrawn during the week was $13,965,000, making the gold balance $56,724,000. A considerable amount was withdrawn to be sorted for export next week as the high rate of exchange only makes profitable the shipment of the heavy weight coins.

Gold shipping houses say that more gold will be shipped next week than was taken this year. They point to the fact that notwithstanding the tremendous amount of bills of exchange which came upon the market against gold shipments this week, the market advanced yesterday and sight sterling closed at 4.89¼, an advance of 1-32 per cent for the day. A member of the firm of Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., a leading gold shipping house, says:

"This gold export movement, from present indications, will go on each week with increasing magnitude."

It is generally conceded that the gold movement can now be stopped by only one remedy—a large enough issue of bonds to cause a higher money market. With the bank surplus reserves now down to $45,465,075, the issue of only $50,000,000 bonds would withdraw sufficient money from circulation to advance money to 2½ to 3 per cent. A permanent 2½ per cent. money market would stop the gold exports, as the foreign bankers would quickly take advantage to make sterling loans, and the outward flow of money would be immediately checked.

Despite rumors of bond issues, bankers who are usually well-informed say that they have received no information, directly or indirectly, of any impending call for bond subscriptions. One authority, however, believes that the administration cannot afford to wait any longer for action on the part of congress, and will issue a bond call next week, perhaps not later than Monday. There was also some belief that the secretary of the treasury might choose to issue 4 per cent bonds, as the premium would be less than in the case of the 5 per cents.

The rapid depletion of the gold reserve has excited alarm abroad and foreigners have been pouring securities into this country during the last six weeks, selling many high class railroad bonds payable in currency, which were tenaciously held all during the panic. For the first time since the panic there was developed this week a weak tendency in gilt-edged securities. It is believed that unless the situation changes very radically the whole treasury reserve will melt away in about three weeks unless there is a bond issue in the meantime.

There was no other subject discussed in financial centres. The clearing house committee met and were joined by National Bank Presidents Simmons, Cannon and Tappen. The situation was dicussed, but no action can be taken now by the banks, so that an exchange of views was the only result of the conference.

Houses with foreign connections say that the foreigners are exceedingly puzzled by the inaction of congress and cannot understand why the simple remedy at least of the issue of low-rate gold bonds should not be authorizer by congress. Understanding nothing of the complication of politics in this country, they fear that there is something radically wrong in our financial system or that the sentiment of the people really favors a silver currency basis, and consequently are liquidating their holdings of American securities.

This feeling is intensified by some of the foreign houses which have become wearied by the situation and have advised their foreign correspondents that a silver currency basis appears to be inevitable.

Ohio Combine.

Akron, O., Jan. 26.—There have been rumors for some months of a combine among the manufacturers of oil cloth in this country. Dr. A. M. Cole, president of the Western Linoleum company of this city confirmed the reports and stated that the combination would be consummated within three weeks. The capital stock of the new company will be $3,000,000 and it will include practically all the manufacturers in the country.

GUATEMALA'S REPLY.

Rumors That She Seeks To Evade Mexico's Demand.

City of Mexico, Jan. 26.—The arrival of Guatemala's reply to Mexico's final demands has caused a considerable war fever throughout this district. As yet, however, nobody outside the foreign office has seen the reply. Rumors of every sort are afloat, most of them to the effect that the Guatemalan government covers once more the old ground, seeking at once to evade the issue and secure delay.

Ignacio Mariscal, minister of foreign affairs, would say nothing about the documents, except that it was enormously long and would be laid before the cabinet meeting to-day. A statement is expected from the government soon after this meeting, although Senor Mariscal declined to say that it would be made.

The war scare has taken possession of almost everybody, foreign and native. Most of the foreign ministers here are said to have informed their governments that war is almost inevitable. The government is buying horses and is working its small-arms factory night and day with double the usual number of men. The manufacture of ammunition is pressed forward with equal haste.

The governor of one federal district has offered President Diaz two battalions to go to the front the moment war shall be declared. It is understood, however, that the government does not intend to begin the war on land. The first hostile step, if Guatemala still refuse to yield, will be to blockade her ports.

Foreigners here express some doubt as to the effectiveness of such a blockade, since the Mexican navy has but half a dozen small craft, manned by hardly 500 seamen and officers.

STILL STICKS TO HIS STORY.

Storzkinzie, the Suspected Wife Murderer, Pleads Not Guilty.

Thompson Conn., Jan. 26.—Storzkinzie, the suspected wife murderer, was again submitted to a trying ordeal from the reporters, but did not change his assertions.

He accounts for the bloody clothes by saying that he had thrown his coat and blanket over the dead horse in the yard. He was nonplussed when asked why hairs like his wifes were with the blood, but repeated his denials. The missing stones in the wall and the holes in the mire in the swamp he did not explain, but claimed to be unable to understand English when anything was asked about them.

He persisted that the rooms in which the blood was found were not the living rooms, hence he could not be accountable for all that might be found in them. He said his wife had said that the farm was not a good place at which to live and she would go away to stay. To this he avers he said nothing. He would not even admit ever having quarrelled with her.

Upon being arraigned before Justice Tourtellotte and the warrant charging him with murder having been read to him, and explained by an interpreter, Storzkinzie said that he did not understand and would not plead. He finally said that he would make a statement before the Polish Catholic priest at Webster.

The clergyman was sent for and Storzkinzie repeated his original statement and reiterated his innocence. He then pleaded not guilty.

WERE NEARLY STARVED.

Pitiable Condition of a Family on Wilkesbarre Mountain.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Jan. 26.—It was reported to Captain Dewitt, of the Humane association, that the family of Sam Nichols, living on the Wilkesbarre mountain near this city, were in danger of starvation. A visit was made to the house and an awful condition of affairs was revealed. Five young children, the oldest 12 and the youngest 2 years of age, were found in the house without any clothing.

They were making a meal of some frozen turnips, and were huddled around a wood fire in a stove in an attempt to keep warm. In the stable a horse and cow were found nearly dead, having had nothing to eat for five days. When the humane officer called the father and mother were both absent looking for employment and food for the children.

Captain Dewitt at once came to this city and going to stores purchased a sleigh load of provisions and clothing for the destitute family. Nichols has been out of employment for eight months and tells a pitiable tale of his hardships.

Rowe, of this city, has made an offer, which has been accepted, to the directors of the Mohawk & Hudson River Humane society to erect a building at a cost of not less than $25,000 for use as shelter house for children, whom the society may rescue from cruel or negligent parents.

HYPNOTIC CRIME.

A QUEER STORY OF MURDER IN RURAL KANSAS.

The Self-Confessed Murderer Acquitted and His Hypnotic Control Convicted by a Jury. The Community Are in Harmony With the Finding.

That sinister force of mentality which Lady Macbeth exerted on her lord, bringing his soul and conscience from its heights of purity and enslaving him, has been evidenced in real life in Sumner county, Kansas.

A jury there acquitted the actual murderer and convicted a man who had subjected the murderer to hypnotic "suggestion of murder."

No case in Western courts has excited the interest of the public and the professions—legal and medical—as the State vs Tom MacDonald. MacDonald shot Tom Patton down in cold blood. On the witness stand he confessed the deed, but not the guilt. His defense was that his employer, Anderson Gray, a farmer used him as the hypnotic instrument to put an enemy out of the way. The jury, comprising twelve as sensible men as can be found in the State of Kansas, acquitted the murderer in deed, and convicted Anderson Gray, the hypnotist, the murderer in fact.

The story of the crime with its mysterious and unusual circumstances is this:

Tom MacDonald was a cook in a restaurant in the city of Wichita, Kan., for some months previous to last April. He was known as a man of ordinary capacity of mind, endowed with no special or distinctive traits other than an even, workaday temperament, and lacking in any attribute that might be spurred into viciousness.

Anderson Gray is a wealthy farmer in Sumner county. His farms and his ranches reach from horizon to horizon in the dead level of a Kansas landscape. He is tall and powerful. His 57 years have not bent his form or touched his hair with silver. His portliness is in marked contrast with the appearance of his agricultural neighbors, and his hair still retains the lustrous black quality of youth.

Cousins and neighbors, in Sumner county, near the little town of Conway Springs, lived Dave and Tom Patton, dwelling in peace and amity.

About a year ago, the wife of one of Anderson Gray's neighbors began to get "cranky." Her husband expecting a divorce, in order to avoid a division of property transferred his property to Anderson Gray. There was one witness to the transaction. This was Thomas Patton.

The divorce came and the sharp farmer prepared to ask Gray to transfer the property back to him.

Gray had been conniving and conspiring. He had a settled conviction that his divorced neighbor should never get his property back. There was one stone in the otherwise smooth path—the witness, Tom Patton.

Last fall Gray met Tom Patton, the witness to the transfer of the property. It was on a quarter section road. He tried his theories on the new fangled hypnotism and found them practicable. So far as the evidence goes there is no indication that he touched Tom Patton at all. But he gave him the suggestion that his cousin, Dave Patton, was his enemy and would kill him on sight.

In some manner Dave overcame the insane animosity of his cousin, and the two lived in peace.

Then hypnotist Gray, baffled in his first trial, tried a second time.

He came to Wichita in search of a fresh subject. He found him in the person of Tom MacDonald, the cook in the Wichita restaurant.

MacDonald and his recently wedded wife, a girl of nineteen years, left Wichita for Gray's farm, near Conway Springs, November last. MacDonald was twenty-one years old. In two weeks from that time MacDonald was completely under the control of his employer, Gray.

The subject went into pistol practice at the suggestion of Gray and the result was the murder of Patton.

When MacDonald was arrested he was in the best of spirits. On the Saturday following Mrs. MacDonald and Gray was arrested, and while all of them were in jail, but in separate cells, MacDonald overjoyed at being the informer, confessed all, telling the officers how he had killed Patton, but insisting that he was not the murderer. He insisted that he knew what murder was, but when he fired that shot he did not know it was murder.

On this peculiar confession Gray was held, and tried in Wellington, the county seat, and convicted of murder in the first degree on the first poll of the jury.

The latter part of the week MacDonald was tried. He repeated his confession and former testimony, which is substantially the same as in the narrative, and was acquitted, the jury holding that he was under the hypnotic influence of Gray and was not responsible.

That is the story of a trial—the first perhaps wherein the murderer in deed was acquitted and the murderer in fact sentenced to death, which in Kansas amounts to a life sentence, as the Governor's prerogative of ordering an execution has never been used in this State.

The verdict of the jury is in harmony with the sentiment of the community.

The Fatal Word.

"My darling," he exclaimed rapturously, "how brilliant you are. You fairly—er—bristle with ideas."

The Chicago girl drew herself up to her full height and brushed him haughtily aside as she swept grandly out of the room.

"You seem to forget"—she turned on her heel at the door and faced him—"that I cannot brook any reference to my father's business."—N. Y. World.

"I don't. She has ceased to be a lady, and has not yet succeeded in becoming a gentleman."—Life.

"No, but my advice would be, if you have anything important to tell a bad egg, why break it gently."—American Review.

WHEN THE QUEEN TRAVELS.

Red Tape By the Mile to Insure the Safety of England's Ruler.

The importance of the Queen's life to the nation renders it necessary that every precaution should be taken to avert any possibility of a collision when she is travelling on the railway. The question has been most thoroughly gone into by her trusted private secretary, Sir Henry Ponsonby, with the assistance of the responsible managers of the various lines over which her Majesty travels in the course of her journeys, and an elaborate system has been evolved which practically precludes any possibility of an accident, provided the orders issued to the subordinates on the railway are properly carried out and no gross error is committed.

That the companies are fully conscious of the responsibility placed upon them may be gathered from their scheme of precautions. All traffic is stopped on the line and the points are locked in front of the royal train for a certain period before its actual arrival at any one spot, and this period is regulated by telegraphic advices from various stations announcing the approach of the train. The result is that the line is entirely free, all traffic being stopped at certain stations ahead and run into sidings until the royal train has actually passed.

Moreover, a pilot engine runs in front of the royal train to clear the way, so that if by any extraordinary accident any traffic should have escaped on to the line or any obstacle should have been placed there by malicious design, the pilot engine will act as a scout, either to stop and turn back the vagrant engine or to bring the royal procession behind to an immediate standstill by timely signals. An additional precaution for the security of the line itself is found in the guard of pointsmen and signalmen who are posted within signalling distance of one another, and whose duty it is to notify from hand to hand on one side that the line is free within their control, and on the other that the royal train is approaching. Supposing, therefore, that some runaway engine escape the embargo laid at the junctions and the pilot engine was rendered helpless by running off the line, the safety of the Queen would still be secured by the rule that no signalman is to allow the royal train to pass the box unless it has been signalled from the box immediately ahead of him that the line is clear.

PARSLEY AFTER ONIONS.

The Herb Will Remove the Bad Odor of This Vegetable.

At this season of the year, when the digestive system is apt to become overloaded with rich, greasy or sweet foods, plenty of onions should be eaten as a counterbalance.

They are good for the stomach, the complexion and the nerves when eaten either boiled or raw, but of course the unpleasant odor left on the breath after indulgence in them is a barrier to their use to many people who would otherwise be able to take advantage of the good there is in them.

To overcome all this and give every one a chance, an old remedy is suggested—parsley. To entirely destroy the odor of bad onions eat a small sprig of this pretty green herb after partaking of them. There will be nothing in the breath or about the person at all suggestive of the odoriferous bulb five minutes after the parsley is eaten. Any one can have parsley, for if he does not have access to that convenience known as a "soup bunch," it may be readily grown in any warm, sunny window. Soak the seeds about twenty-four hours before planting in water that has the chill removed, and, after planting, water plentifully.

The little green heads will peep up over the earth in about fifteen days, and when the plants are well grown your window has a pretty ornament in it.

ALL IN ONE.

Advantages of Matrimony as Demonstrated by the Married Man.

The married man was talking to the bachelor.

"Why don't you marry?" inquired the benedict.

"I don't want to be a married man, I suppose," replied the bachelor.

"What kind of a man do you want to be?"

"Not any kind for any length of time. For instance, I'd like to be a boy part of the time; then a lover sighing out his heart; then a husband and father for a month or so; then an old man for another month, and so on, changing about as the mood might take me. That sort of thing beats these everlasting youth snaps all to pieces."

"Then marry," said the benedict, with supreme confidence.

"That would knock my plan all to pieces."

"On the contrary, my dear fellow," said the married man, settling down to his work, "it would make you all of these. When you wanted to be a boy you could join your children in their pleasures and plans, in their sports and sorrows; when you wanted to be a lover you would always find your wife ready to listen to the same sweet words you told her in the June nights of long ago; when you wanted to be a married man you could take off your coat and put up stoves and get out and do the marketing and study up new ways of how not to forget what your wife told you to get downtown; when you wanted to be an old man you could sit down in your office and wonder where you were to get money enough to keep things going and think over the grave cares and responsibilities of a man in your position. There it all is, old fellow," concluded the married man, "and you have selected it yourself. Now marry."

And the bachelor didn't.—Detroit Free Press.

A Young Philosopher.

He is only six, and he has been quoted in print before. His humor is natural and unconscious, and in addition he has a faculty of reasoning by analogy that would be valuable to many an adult head. His little sister was visiting a neighboring girl, and his mamma requested him to go and escort her home.

"Mamma," he replied, "when we were in the country last summer Mrs. Myers asked Mr. Myers to go and get the cows. Mr. Myers said, 'You go and get them yourself.'"

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 26, 1895

A Hand to Hand Saber Fight.

Jan. 27 is the anniversary of a desperate cavalry encounter between Burnside's and Longstreet's men in east Tennessee, 1864. The dashing sabreur, Colonel Edward M. McCook, the Hotspur of that fighting family, rode at the head of a cavalry division to attack two divisions of Martin's cavalry corps led by Morgan and Armstrong, both valorous captains. The Confederate advance, having been driven back two miles step by step, united with the reserves and made a stand at the intersection of roads near Fair Garden. McCook led in his whole division on both sides of Fair Garden road, ending up with a galloping charge. La Grange's demibrigade ran upon a superior force of Morgan's troopers around a battery which raked the Fair Garden road. Calling up detachments of the Second and Fourth Indiana, La Grange headed a magnificent and gallant dash along the road and into the battery, sabering the gunners and their cavalry supporters.

Two cannon and many prisoners were captured in the rush.

At the same time Major J. P. Lesslie and a handful of men of the Fourth regiment, with drawn swords, charged from the highway into the field on the left, McCook and his staff, yielding to the fury of the hour, at their head. The opposing lines met on open ground with a fair field for a hand to hand combat The struggle was brief. Morgan's line was routed, his battleflag and escort captured, and Morgan himself barely escaped. In the height of the melee the gallant Lesslie was shot dead by a bullet which pierced his left breast.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

A CARDINAL'S VIEW.

THE CHURCH REGARDS THE NEW WOMAN AS AN EVIL INFLUENCE.

Cardinal Gibbons Finds Much to Criticise and Nothing to Praise in the Nineteenth Century Idea. He Says Strong Minded Women Are of Ancient Origin.

Cardinal Gibbons, of the Roman Catholic Church of Baltimore, has recently made some very pointed remarks about the advanced woman. He says:

"The new woman is the woman suffragist and her daughter. Personally I know nothing of that woman except that recently she strove to prove my knowledge of ancient history incorrect. However, I bear her no ill will for that. But as a Catholic I am bound to disprove any so-called woman movement. The Church of Rome exalts womanhood in the veneration it accords the mother of Jesus Christ, but in exalting woman it still has regard for the special nature of her mission in the world, which is equal to man's, though not identical with it. Advocates of woman's rights, though I would be very sorry to impugn their motives, are very far from contributing to the real progress and happiness of woman.

"Woman suffrage is doubtless the logical outcome of the higher education of women. That, however, is not to establish the right of woman suffrage. For the higher education of woman that takes her from gentle influences—from the influence of maternal solicitude and religion—to place her among men in universities that prescribe education without reference to the heart and soul, debases womanhood through developing woman's intellect. There is a saying of a German writer very appropos of this—that the modern educated woman whose head has been enlarged at the expense of her heart is like the Strasburg geese whose livers have been fattened—very fine livers, but very sick geese.

"God has given us a heart to be formed to virtue as well as a head to be enlightened. Taking no more sentimental or religious authority than Webster, his definition of to educate is 'to instill into the mind principles of art, science, morals, religion and behavior.'

"Also Guizot, an eminent Protestant writer, declares that education to be truly good must be fundamentally religious. Now, fatal as is the indifference to eternal truths resulting among men from a rejection of this principle, if the women, the mothers of our country, are to divorce religion from their reason, and gauge their excellence by the standard of a secular education, what can we expect of their children?

"Wrong, wrong, all wrong, and the greatest menace to our American liberty is the growing disregard of this country for the little child. Religion reveres and glorifies the little child. It is as a little child that the second person of the Sacred Trinity was born into the world. It was the little children that without reserve Christ bade come unto Him, and it was them he set up as a type of spiritual excellence by which men attain the Kingdom of Heaven.

"Yet, as a people, we neglect the American child in our system of public education that excludes all religious training. We further disregard the young child in lax laws that make possible the divorce of parents and the disruption of homes. And if now the standards of the woman movement are carrying us still further from the assurance of all good that inheres in the young child, our future is a sorry one indeed.

"The Catholic Church has one law fixed forever on this point—that human life is sacred, and any means whatsoever employed to extinguish life, though it be but an instant's duration, is murder, for which the offender's soul must one day answer before a God.

"There can be no doubt that as the woman usurps the man's rightful place in the home—becomes the law maker and the bread winner of the family—the man must become correspondingly effeminate. But the woman suffragist of the present century flatters herself in denominating herself the New Woman. She is a very old woman—old as Eve, prompted by curiosity and lawlessness to gain information of the devil, and her effect on man will probably be no more than a warrant for old Adam's feeble excuse for his enjoyment of forbidden fruit. The bachelor girl you describe who indulges in many sports is not a novelty in history. She and the present craze for physical culture among women mark a return to the moral standard of the Lacedemonian women, who were taught when maidens to engage in exercises that strengthened their bodies and imparted grace to their movements, but at the sacrifice of female modesty. Then the bachelorhood of the modern woman is not new. It but stamps our civilization with the character of the domestic life of ancient Greece. This counted women of elementary education proper material for wives, while clever women of higher education enjoy the license men accord their mistresses. Also the Malthusian doctrine by which the modern marriage is regulated is after all no more an indication of advancing civilization than the practice in India that regulates the number of offspring by drowning nearly all female infants. Men may even be obliged to return to this method if the advancing New Woman goes to much greater lengths in enforcing her theories on society."

POLICEMEN MUST GIVE BONDS.

An Illinois Scheme for Making Peace Officers Responsible to Citizens.

Senator Dwyer of Chicago, has a police reform bill which he will introduce soon after he goes to Springfield. It provides that no person having the authority of a peace officer shall be vested with the powers of his office until he shall file a $5,000 bond.

The bill makes all offices vested with the power of arresting citizens subservient to this law. It also will provide for an examination for candidates for police positions as to their thorough knowledge of the laws under which warrants are served, sight arrests made, and the rights of all persons so arrested under the statutes.

Briefly, policemen are to be made pecuniarily responsible to citizens for false, malicious and hasty arrests, and citizens are to have redress for all damages, bodily or otherwise, suffered at the hands of incompetent, brutal and drunken policemen.

HETTY GREEN'S QUIET HUSBAND.

A Retiring Man Who is Brought in Notoriety by an Eccentric Wife.

Many men who seek notoriety fail to attain it, and some who have no such desire find it thrust upon them. To this latter class belongs Edward Henry Green, a quiet spoken and extremely modest gentleman, who, on account of being the husband of the most wealthy and one of the most eccentric women in the country, finds himself brought into public notice.

Though Mr. Green has not lived with his wife for some years, he is evidently not out of her mind, for he receives occasional visits from her and at times, when he is not well, she shows solicitude and makes him frequent visits. Then, for reasons and to accomplish purposes best known to herself, she makes frequent inquiry about her husband in unexpected quarters.

Such episodes are evidently annoying to Mr. Green, and cause him to more closely keep to himself and shut the door against all who may wish to refer to his peculiar marriage relations.

For this reason he is under the guardianship of the attendants at the Cumberland and the Union League Club, to protective him from representatives of the press. For this protection he pays liberal fees, and feels secure, for, if a persistent reporter desires to have a chat with Mr. Green, and insists on his card being presented, the attendant will take it, disappear, be gone the conventional length of time, and return with the message that "Mr. Green wishes to be excused." Mr. Green has not seen the card or heard of the visitor, but the programme has been carried out according to his instructions.

Mr. Green may have had his troubles, but suffering for the need of money has not been one of them, for he started with the proverbial silver spoon, and though it has more than once dropped from his lips it has always been again placed within his reach, and it is there now, held by his wife. For he is regularly pensioned by her, and provided with the means of living according to the demands of his gentlemanly tastes.

When he married Miss Harriet H. Robinson he was the fortunate possessor of a million dollars, but he soon learned that riches frequently take to themselves wings. This lesson was taught to him in the overcrowded school of Wall street, where he speculated with more daring than judgement. One morning, eleven years ago, when the Stock Exchange opened and he was called on to make good his obligation, he found himself bankrupt. During his career as a speculator he spent money with a lavish hand and was know as "Spendthrift" Green.

After Mr. Green's failure in Wall street his debts were all paid, he retired from "'Change" and settled down as a club man of very simple and regular habits. Since then he has nothing to do with business, living as a gentleman of leisure and resisting all temptations to again enter speculation. His acquaintances are confined almost exclusively to members of the Union League Club.

His time is about evenly divided between his apartments at the Cumberland and the rooms of the Union League, where he is a conspicuous figure and an enjoyable companion. From the rising hour until one o'clock he is to be found in his sitting room with his books. The daily papers he reads with care, and though he scowls when he sees his wife's name, he carefully clips and preserves all the articles referring to her. Here he receives only his most intimate friends, leaving his acquaintances to be met in the club room.

At one o'clock he walks leisurely to his club and usually stays there until quite late at night, enjoying his cigar, a game of cards and social conversation. Now and then, though not frequently, the evening is broken by a visit to the theatre.

Such is the quiet life of the husband of the woman who is able to lend millions of dollars, and who, through her eccentricity of life and careful management of her fortune, has gained for herself world wide notoriety, and brought him into public notice because he is her husband.—N. Y. World.

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS SMOKE.

The Machine Cuts Off the End and Lights the Cigar.

It's a wonderful labor saving device for smokers that an employe of a Broadway hotel has had patented. It leaves nothing to be desired.

It is a machine that cuts a cigar neatly, lights it, draws a few puffs on it and deposits it on a tray all ready for instant use.

"Some persons think there is a little too much of the machine," the inventor said to me recently, "but I believe in having things complete and up to date in every way, manner and form.

"You drop your cigar in a slot. It falls on a small platform. A spring knife cuts off the tip. Then it drops down and one end fits into a tiny hole, which communicates with a cylinder of compressed air. At the same time the other end comes in contact with a small gas jet.

"The air draws on the cigar, puffs it two or three times, until it gets a good start. Then your lighted cigar rolls down this inclined plane and drops on the tray all ready for business.

"Will I have a slot arrangement so a man by dropping a coin can get a five or ten-cent cigar already lighted? Really I hadn't thought of it. Do you think it would be a good scheme?"—N. Y. Herald.

Mrs. Barnes's Story.

Mrs. Barnes, one of Chicago's society leaders, is telling an entertaining little story to her friends. The other day she wanted to go for a drive, but when her coachman appeared he proved to be lamentably intoxicated. Mrs. Barnes upbraided him indignantly:

"John," she said, "you're drunk."

"Yes'm," he responded, with effusive meekness. "I am."

"Well," continued his mistress, "you can't drive me out in that condition!"

"No'm," was the reply, "but if you'll go hire a carriage, I'll pay for it, mum."—Boston Globe.

From Prominent People.

A great many persons to our knowledge have voluntarily pronounced Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy successful in curing them of disease. Here are a number of statements that again demonstrate the value of this medicine.

Commander James S. Dean, of Gen. Grant Post, G. A. R., Rondout, N. Y., contracted an aggravated stomach trouble, which resulted in chronic dyspepsia. He suffered misery until he used Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. "After using it a week," says Commander Dean, "I felt better, and in a short while was entirely cured, that terrible distress and food breaking up sour in my throat had all gone."

Rev. I. W. Hill, Pastor Methodist Church, Accord, N. Y., "I can speak highly of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy as a blood medicine. Ten years ago I had a cancer removed my lip. I then began the use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and to this day no sign of the ugly thing has reappeared."

The Sisters of Charity, St Mary's Female Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., say: "The satisfaction we realize from the use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy surpass all expectation."

The worst cases of eczema, salt rheum and scrofula yield to its curative power, nervousness, sleeplessness, liver and kidney complaints and all urinary troubles are cured by its use.

Three Suspicious Characters.

Special Officer Stewart, who is employed by J. E. Stewart, of West Seventh street, to take care of his property while he is in the city, watched Tuesday night for over two hours three very suspicious men who kept patrolling Seventh street, from Plainfield avenue to Spooner avenue. Stewart says "The cooler is wide open for such men".

A Barn in Danger.

The high winds of last night came very near causing the destruction of Pliny Fisk's barn about 2:30 this morning. Officer Robinson while passing the barn at that hour noticed the stove was red hot and notified the hostler who opened the barn and found the woodwork around the stove very much scorched from the heat. The stove was promptly opened and the draughts shut off.

At about the same hour some saggy electric wires on Park avenue were blown together by the wind, and for several minutes there was a fine display of lightning flashes.

—The transparency of the Trinity Church tea was burned last night.

Buster Than the Bee.

How doth the little busy ad
Improve each shining minute,
And gather dollars, dimes and cents
For the merchant who is in it.

A man one time a good thing had
Which people would have prized,
But he never sold a single one,
For he never advertised.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Jan. 27. Prayer For Colleges the Topic.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—I Tim. iv, 12, 16; II Tim. i, 6, 7; I Tim. i, 18, 19.

Maturity of judgment, experience and discretion are not to be expected of those young in life in such large measure as of those more advanced in years. But love, faith, hopefulness, purity of intention and action are easier of growth in early life than if neglected till later. It is not only a custom worthy of observance among us to set aside a special day each year when the young people in our schools are to be specially remembered, but it is entirely Scriptural and reasonable to expect the most talented and able of them to early be directed into godly habits and experiences.

The highest attainments in scholarship, the broadest culture of mind, with all wise athletic exercises, are compatible with and helpful to genuine piety.

The world's highest prizes are for those who shall achieve highest service.

The time has come when smartness is at a discount and the demand is for well rounded manhood and womanhood. Moral excellence is indispensable to real success. The men prominent in the world of science, letters, politics and church, who hold the power of the nations in their grasp, are more than ever before men of sterling integrity. In our colleges it is now recognized that ethical culture is a prime requisite of all adequate education. Religion is no longer sneered at in college halls, but has come to the place of honor. Temptations still surround the young of both sexes in our schools, who, away from accustomed restraints and influences of home, are with undisciplined powers largely thrown upon their own responsibility. They need wise counsel of parents, teachers, pastors and friends. They need prayers and helpful words. More liberal financial aid is also needed in all our higher institutions of learning. We need to pray that the Holy Spirit will lead our people to consecrate their wealth to the advancement of the kingdom of God.

League, Endeavor, Union.

Much useless regret, some lamentation, if not denunciation, have been expended because all the young people of the Protestant churches have not seen fit to unite under one organic head. A single society, with an immense membership, monster conventions, one pledge and many other equally attractive features, does seem desirable on many accounts. Some false sentiment has been aroused in quarters where it was taken for granted that the denominational societies were copies from if not rivals of an older undenominational one. The facts in regard to the Epworth League are simply that it was organized as a consolidation of the many scattered societies in the Methodist Episcopal church, many of which had been doing efficient service for years. The discipline of the church had long made it the duty of every preacher in charge to organize wherever possible a local lyceum. Many of these were banded together under various titles. Five large societies in different parts of the country were pursuing similar ends. The Oxford league had received official recognition from the church and was regarded with special favor by some of the bishops. The desirability of having one organization for the whole denomination and enlarging the scope of its operations led to a convention of delegates from the five general societies in Cleveland.

After long, careful and prayerful consultation the Epworth League was formed. It received at once the favor of the church, and at the succeeding general conference became an organic part of the Methodist Episcopal church. Its position is similar to that of the class meeting in our work.

In the peculiar connectional polity of our church no other form of organization could meet the requirements of the case. An undenominational or interdenominational or union society may be all right for those churches where each local body is practically independent. Our own needs could not be best served nor the cause of Christ in the world best advanced by us through such a society. Our consolidation is a family affair and shows no discourtesy or lack of good fellowship.

Inductive Bible Study.

In no previous age has the Bible been so extensively and so closely studied as at the present time. The discoveries of the past ten years in the east have thrown wonderful light upon many points of history, geography, manners and customs. The most recent methods of study have greatly assisted in popularizing Scripture study and made it much more profitable.

Many chapters pursue systematic work in this line under the oversight of the literary department. Among the best aids in this matter are the "Lessons In Inductive Bible Study," prepared by General Secretary Dr. E. A. Schell. These will be found extremely helpful in individual reading of the Scriptures. Their use in the devotional meetings of the Epworth League and prayer meetings of the church would in many cases infuse new life and devotion into the service.

The Divine In Man.

It was Wessel who said: "Every generous soul has something divine in itself which it loves to communicate. The more excellent it is the more it strives to imitate the Divine Being. Accordingly that holy and divinely beloved soul (Christ), resembling God more than any other creature, gave itself wholly up to the brethren, inasmuch as it saw God doing the same with regard to itself."

The measure of action is the sentiment from which it proceeds.—Emerson.

The most abandoned own that others if abandoned are undone.—Young.

The highest reward of love to God is the love of God.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 27. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Accepting Christ.—Rev. xxii, 1-17. (A meeting for the associate members suggested. It may be held by the lookout committee.)

The book of Revelation is for the most part a book of mysteries. Undoubtedly it teaches the one great lesson that the time will come when Christ and His kingdom shall win a great triumph and shall rule all things. The figures and illustrations by which this is set forth may not always be understood, yet this one central truth stands out as plain as it can be. It is therefore a book of blessed comfort and consolation to the church. But another feature that has made it precious in all times is the wonderful invitation it contains in almost its last words. What a fitting close to God's word! "The Spirit and the bride say come. Let him that heareth say come." These comes refer to the second coming of Christ, and the particular invitation to come to Christ follows: "Let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." This is perhaps the most precious invitation to accept Christ found in all the Bible.

1. Who may accept Christ? All may accept Him. This is set forth in two ways in this invitation. "Let him that is athirst come." This opens the way for all to come, for who is there that does not thirst for eternal salvation? But as if this was not definite enough to include all it is made all comprehensive by the use of "whosoever." "Whosoever will" may come. Will we accept Christ? then, is the question.

2. Why should we accept Christ? Because we all want to be saved, and we can be saved in no other way. All men want to be saved. All expect in some way to be saved, but there is only one way to be saved, and that is through Jesus Christ. This is the plain teaching of the Bible. "I am the way," says Christ, not "a way," or "one of the ways," but "the way." And, again, "No man cometh to the Father but by Me." "There is no other name under heaven given among men," says the apostle, "whereby we must be saved." "Lord, to whom shall we go but unto Thee? Thou hast the words of eternal life." There is no place where we can go except to Christ.

3. How should we accept faith? By simple faith and trust in Him. The water of life is free. We can not earn our salvation. It is a gift of God to whomsoever will have it. The method of salvation may seem too simple and easy, but God says it is effectual, and we should trust God and in that trust accept Christ.

Bible Readings.—Isa. lv, 1-3; Eccl. xii, 1; Math. ix, 9; xi, 28; Luke xxiv; 47; John xii, 20; xiv, 6; Acts ii, 38-41; xvi, 30, 31; Rom. viii, 1; I Cor. viii, 5; Eph. ii, 8, 9; I Pet. ii; 20; iii, 18; II Pet. iv, 6; I John v, 10.

Associates, Take the Next Step.

Let us ask God to help us encourage our associate members to take the next step. How I wish we might have a genuine revival of evangelistic work throughout the societies everywhere! Pardon the abruptness of the statement, but the results of our soul winning have not been equal to our opportunities. I know thousands have come into the churches from our societies, and we praise God for that. Indeed as we look back over the past five years' work we can sing the doxology with fervor. Last year 183,550 of our numbers joined churches; the year before, 158,000; the year before that, 120,000; the year before that, 82,500; the year before that, 70,000. In other words, 614,510 have passed from our membership into their churches in the past five years. What a ransomed host! How much or how little our individual work has had to do with bringing about this blessed result we know not. Sufficiently thankful are we to know that Christian Endeavor may have had something to do with the victory under God's guidance. But again I say the results, blessed as they are, have not equaled our great opportunities.—John Willis Baer.

The German Endeavorers.

A recent number of Der Mitarbeiter, the organ of the German Christian Endeavorers in this country, contains more than three pages of communications from Germany, which show the progress of Christian Endeavor work in the fatherland. German pastors are minded to take the Christian Endeavor society just as it is and intend to organize genuine Endeavor societies, like the first one. An officer of high standing in the German army earnestly asks for the prayers of American Endeavorers that the Lord may make way for the society in Germany. Shall not his request meet with an instant and ready response?—Selected.

Loving Kindness.

We delight to gaze down a long avenue of trees. It is delightful to gaze from end to end of the long vista, a sort of verdant temple, with its branching pillars and its arches of leaves. Even so look down the long line of your years, at the green boughs of mercy overhead and the strong pillars of loving kindness and faithfulness which bear up your joys.—Spurgeon.

Nature's Touch.

Nature looked out on the woodlands
As summer was closing her eyes
And said, "When the autumn awakens,
I'll give her a brilliant surprise."

Then, dipping her brush in the flame tints,
She scattered them broadcast around
Till the shrubs, and the vines, and the tree tops
With brightness and glory abound.

But the glory was transient and faded.
The leaves withered up, being dead,
And losing their hold from the branches
Dropped down on their cold, wintry bed.

While the trees their poor, bare arms extended,
As if in a silent appeal,
That they might again have their own covering,
For they seemed to think Nature must feel.

When spring, joyous spring, is returning,
Melting ice, both with sunshine and rain,
The heart of Dame Nature relenting,
She'll clothe them with verdure again.

PASSED BY THE SENATE

The Nicaragua Canal Bill Ready for the House.

Important Amendments Agreed to Before the Final Vote Is Taken—Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill Disposed of in the House Private Pensions Considered.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The long parliamentary struggle over the Nicaraguan canal bill came to a close in the senate, as predicted, and the bill was passed by a vote of 21 yeas to 21 nays. Most of the afternoon was consumed in a discussion in which the speeches were limited to five minutes. It was some times carried on in a pretty angry fashion, but nothing very important or interesting was said on either side of the question.

At 5 o'clock the talk ceased and the voting began—the result of the first vote indicating a safe majority for the bill. Several amendments were accepted by Mr. Morgan (dem., Ala.), who had charge of the bill and were agreed to as a matter of course. The most important amendment was one which was offered by Mr. Frye (rep., Me.), and which was amended on the motion of Mr. Wolcott (rep., Col.) This dual amendment required the work of canal construction to be divided into sections and to be given out on contract to the lowest responsible bidders after advertised, the aggregate awards not to exceed the amount of seventy million dollars.

The substitute offered by Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.), requiring a preliminary survey and estimate and a report on the practicability of the Menocal route was defeated—yeas 23, nays 29—and finally, the bill was passed by a majority of ten, and will now be sent to the house of representatives for the action of that body.

The morning hour had been spent in a debate over the Hawaiian question—Mr. Mills (dem., Tex.) making a fiery speech in condemnation of the means by which the provisional government was established and in defense of the course of the administration. The subject will come up again to-day.

The sundry civil appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1896, has been finally disposed of by the house. The total amount carried by the bill as it passed was $39,037,721.50, a net increase of $497,000 over the amount as reported. The bulk of the increase was due to the requirements of the new printing bill.

Two important changes in legislation were made by the bill. One was to restore to the secretary of the treasury the discretion that formerly was vested in him to issue notes restricted to the re-issue of such denominations as may be cancelled and retired. The other was an amendment offered by Mr. Coombs (dem., N. Y.) to amend the law authorizing the issue of gold certificates so as to make such certificates non-receivable for customs dues after July 1, 1895, and forbidding their use by national banks in their reserves. The amendments, it was stated, was considered by Secretary Carlisle to be of the utmost importance to the treasury.

Mr. Wilson, chairman of the committee on ways and means, gave notice that he would ask the house after the sundry civil bill had been disposed of to consider the bill to repeal the provision of the tariff law imposing an additional duty of 1-10 of a cent a pound on sugars imported from countries paying an export bounty on that article.

The house took a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening at which time they met and considered private pension bills.

Conlon Bros. Bring Suits Against Two Connecticut Towns.

Waterbury, Conn., Jan. 26.—In view of the decision in favor of Conlon Bros., of this city, declaring unconstitutional the state law by which cities and towns have required transient merchants to pay a license and fine the same for non-payment, the firm is bringing suits for $25,000 each against Norwich and Rockville.

In the Norwich case the allegations will be that William Conlon was arrested three times; that four of the firm's clerks were locked up two hours and its store closed.

In the Rockville suit it will be alleged that Mr. Conlon was arrested fourteen times and the firm forced out of business. The firm also intend to sue merchants, who, it is claimed, conspired to injure it and its business.

STRIKERS STILL FIRM

Few of the 7,000 Men Have Returned To Work.

An Attempt To Run Cars in Greenpoint Yesterday—Companies Expect To Operate All the Lines To-Day—Rioting in Queens County—Other Incidents.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 26.—No troops have been withdrawn from this city, and though they had a comparatively quiet day of it yesterday, there are signs that they will make up for it to-day. The quiet is thought to be the calm before a storm. Disturbances requiring cavalry charges and quick details of infantry occurred during the day and evening, but the troops did not find it necessary to fire upon the crowds. Since the battle of Hicks street, orders have been issued to the militia not to fire upon people who fail to obey commands, but to arrest them and only to fire under dire necessity.

The strikers will stand firm. The presidents have notified them that they will be taken back as individuals on the company's terms and given places so long as vacancies exist. But of the 6,000 to 7,000 men on strike, very few have gone back.

The riotous proceedings which have marred the quiet and peace of Kings county overflowed into Queens county, and the sheriff of that county was obliged to call for troops. This was due to the attempt to operate cars in Greenpoint, from which place a committee of citizens, led by Rev. Father O'Hara appeared two days ago to demand that steps be taken to forfeit the charters of the lines.

At Maspeth, in Queens county, a mob captured a gang of twenty non-union men, driving away the deputy sheriffs, and made prisoners of the men who were sent to take strikers' places. Troop A. was sent to the rescue.

Justice Gaynor, of the supreme court, figured prominently in the day's proceedings. He listened to arguments in the mandamus proceedings and a fair inference from the observances he made from the bench warrants the conclusion that he will grant a peremptory writ compelling the officials of the company to operate their roads, when he hands down his decision to-day.

Mayor Schieren drove to police headquarters last night and held a secret conference with Commissioner Welles and Supt. Campbell. They were informed by the presidents of the three systems affected by the strike that presumably in anticipation of the writ of mandamus all lines are to be operated to-day. They knew that such an attempt would mean plenty of trouble. The mayor declined to discuss the nature of the conference. When it was over, all police captains were summoned to headquarters. It is supposed they expected concerted action in the wire-cutting line between midnight and morning, and were ordered to prevent it if possible. They were also instructed as to their duties in case attempts were made by the companies to open all the lines.

A portion of the Seventh regiment is under marching orders and it is supposed that they are to be moved to Greenpoint, Erie Basin, and other danger points.

The cars were moved on several new lines and, barring numerous accidents, the companies made a good showing. But the end is not yet.

One of the incidents of the day was the forcing of a non-union man from a Fulton street car, near Brooklyn avenue. They chased him along the street, hurling imprecations and missiles at him. They thoroughly frightened him. He sought refuge from them in a saloon at 1,425 Fulton street, but the strikers followed him there and were vigorously belaboring him when five members of Troop A, whose headquarters are near, went to his rescue. The strikers fled upon seeing the cavalrymen, but were chased through the saloon and out into the rear premises, where two men were captured. As the non-union man was either afraid or unable to identify the captives as his assailants, the cavalrymen released them with a stern admonition to cease man-hunting, or the consequences would be serious. Captain Roe said that the statement that one of his men rode his horse into the saloon after the strikers was entirely erroneous, as none of the rescuing party was mounted, at the time.

The presence of a force of linemen at Bedford and Greenpoint avenues, between 4 and 5 p. m., intending to repair broken trolley wires at that and contiguous points, was the occasion for the gathering of a mob, said to have numbered fully 2,000 persons—men, women and boys. Stones were thrown at the linemen, and all the vile epithets that could be conjured up, were flung at them. The linemen were upon the point of abandoning their task when a detachment of Troop A, consisting of Sergeant E. N Nichols and five privates appeared. But the arrival of the cavalrymen did not scare the mob, and the soldiers, as well as the linemen, received such treatment as the rioters thought best expressed their contempt for them. An occasional volley of stones showed its vicious temper and then the cavalrymen were instructed to use the flat sides of their sabres. In speaking of the affray Captain Roe said that the little detachment had a very lively experience and if the soldiers had not acted with determination and some degree of roughness it might have been very serious for his men. "They were obliged to knock down several fellows," Capt. Roe said, "and one man received a severe sabre cut in the face. Our men carried their point keeping the mob at bay until the linemen had repaired wires for nearly three blocks. Sergeant Nichols told me that the coolness and discretion exercised by the troopers alone averted what might have been a very nasty affair."

The companies began shutting down their lines at dark. On some lines one or two cars were run an hour or two after dark. On Butler street a car was stoned; one on Flatbush avenue had a window smashed. There were other interferences and at 9 o'clock no more cars were sent out. As on other nights, when the cars ceased to run disturbances came to an end and quiet settled over the city.

FATAL SLEIGHING ACCIDENT.

Two Persons Killed and Seven Injured at a Railway Crossing.

Middleburg, Pa., Jan. 26.—While a sleigh containing fifteen people was crossing the railroad track at Kreamer, a railroad station five miles east of here, yesterday, it was run into by a freight train and two of its occupants were killed and seven were injured.

The killed are Isaac D. Romig and his son Charles. The injured are A. W. Potter, a lawyer, of Selins Grove, both arms crushed, one of which was amputated and he will probably lose the other; Miss Mollie Burns, aged 21, left leg cut off and right arm broken; Miss Annie M. Potter, cut in leg close to ankle; Mrs. Charles P. Ulrich, severe bruises on back and hands; E. M. Hummel, severe scalp wounds; Mrs. E. M. Hummel, bruised on back, and Miss Eby, slightly cut about the face.

The party was returning to their homes at Selins Grove from a dance. Young Romig was driving the sleigh and his father was seated beside him upon the box. As they approached the railroad crossing at Kreamer the young people of the party were singing and the sleigh bells were jingling merrily. The road to the crossing is lined with buildings and the approach of a train is concealed.

Without a thought of danger Romig drove upon the track and the first intimation that the party had of the impending destruction was the headlight of a freight locomotive that bathed them in its rays. The songs were changed to shrieks of terror, but before anything could be done to avert the disaster the locomotive struck the sleigh directly behind the driver's box.

Crushed and shattered beneath the force of the blow, the sleigh was hurled to one side and its human freight was tossed beside the railroad track. Isaac Romig and his son were ground under the wheels of the engine and instantly killed and Mr. Potter and Miss Burns met a fate hardly less horrible.

STILL ANOTHER VICTORY.

The Japanese Forces Defeat the Chinese at Hai-Ching.

London, Jan. 26.—The correspondent of the Central News at Tokio telegraphs as follows:

"General Nodzu, in command of the Japanese forces at Hai-Ching, sends a dispatch that upon the night of the 22d, expecting to be re-attacked by the Chinese armies at Lao-Yang, he arranged his defense in such a manner as to draw the enemy within six hundred metres of his battle line.

His ruse proved successful and the Fifth Infantry brigade with three batteries suddenly attacked the enemy's right flank. The surprise was complete, taking the Chinese forces completely by surprise, scattering them in great confusion. The reserve Japanese infantry attacked the left flank of the retreating Chinese, who in scattering detachments, fled towards the northeast. Their panic increased as they fled, and there were many prisoners captured.

From the statements of the prisoners it is learned that the Tartar General Chang Sung was in command of the Chinese forces and that their force consisted of twelve thousand infantry.

THE KUCHAN EARTHQUAKE.

Terrible Loss of Life, and Not a Building Left Standing.

London, Jan. 26.—A dispatch from Teheran gives further details of the destructive earthquake at Kuchan. The first shock occurred at noon Thursday, Jan. 17. This was followed by another and in three minutes the town was in ruins.

There was enormous loss of life, and most of the victims were crushed to death by falling buildings, but many were burned, the ruins in which they were entangled having caught fire. Six hundred persons were entombed in a mosque while engaged in prayer. Six hundred other persons perished in the various baths. Not a single building remains standing in the town.

ALMOST A MIRACLE.

A Well-Known Railroad Man's Experience. Life Saved in a Way Which is Wonderful, and Ought to Be Told Everywhere Far and Wide.

MR. CHARLES ANNABLE.

There is no better known railroad man than Mr. Charles Annable, who resides at 20 Jordan ave., Brunswick, Me. He has occupied trusted positions for thirty years on the Maine Central railroad.

"Yes," said Mr. Annable to the writer, "I can tell some remarkable stories from my long thirty years' railroad experience, but something has happened recently which is of the greatest importance to the people. Before I speak of myself, however, let my wife relate her wonderful experience."

"I have been troubled," began Mrs. Annable, "so bad with neuralgia that I could not turn my head in bed. It seemed as though my head was paralyzed. I was so troubled with heart disease and palpitation that a good many nights I thought I might pass away during the night.

"I suffered severely, and expected every day would be my last. My head seemed sometimes as though it would be paralyzed, and the least exertion would upset me and render me terribly weak and nervous. I took Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and it completely cured me—made me well and strong again.

"It seems as though my cure was almost a miracle, for I am now cured. My neighbors, well knowing my condition, are astonished at my recovery, and I cannot half highly enough express my gratitude for this wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I shall be glad to answer inquiries at any time."

"I also have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy," said Mr. Annable, "and have derived great benefit from its use; I know it is the best of all medicines. I have recommended it to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so upon every chance."

The enthusiasm of Mr. and Mrs. Annable in regard to Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is not to be wondered at. It is indeed a wonderful medicine, wonderful because it cures almost everybody who uses it. It makes the sick well everywhere. It gives health and strength to the weak, tired and nervous sufferer. It gives good digestion to the dyspepsic, sweet sleep to the sleepless, and makes life again a joy and pleasure to those whom weak nerves and tired brains have rendered depressed in spirits, melancholy, discouraged and well-nigh hopeless. Use it and it will make you well. Doctors recommend it because it is the discovery and prescription of the well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th St., New York City, who is without doubt the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor can be consulted in all cases without charge, personally or by letter.

(Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller.)

I remembered where I had seen spots of blood before—on the papers I had handed to Ferret—and remembered, too, where that blood had come from. I looked at the cut now, and, finding it nearly healed, sprang in my saddle. Of a certainty this paper had gone through my hands that day! It had been among the others—therefore it must have been passed to Ferret inside another when I first opened the bag! The rogue, getting it and seeing his opportunity, and that I did not suspect, had doubtless secreted it, probably while I was attending to my hand.

I had not suspected him before, because I had ticked off the earlier papers as I handed them to him; and had searched only among the rest and in the bag for the missing one. Now I wondered that I had not done so, and seen the truth from the beginning; and in my impatience I found the leagues through the forest, though the sun was not yet high and the trees sheltered us, the longest I had ridden in my life. When the roofs of the chateau at length appeared before us, I could scarcely keep my pace within bounds. Reflecting how Mme. de Verneuil had overreached herself, and how, by indulging in that last stroke of arrogance, she had placed the secret in my hands, I had much ado to refrain from going to the king booted and unwashed as I was, and though I had not eaten since the previous evening.

However, the habit of propriety, which no man may lightly neglect, came to my aid. I made my toilet, and having broken my fast standing, hastened to the court. On the way I learned that the king was in the queen's garden, and, directing my steps thither, found him walking with my colleagues, Villeroy and Sillery, in the little avenue which leads to the garden of the Conciergerie. A number of the courtiers were standing on the low terrace watching them, while a second group lounged about the queen's staircase. Full of the news which I had for the king, I crossed the terrace, taking no particular heed of anyone, but greeting such as came in my way in my usual fashion. At the edge of the terrace I paused a moment before descending the three steps; and at the same moment, as it happened, Henry looked up and our eyes met. On the instant he averted his gaze, and, turning on his heel in a marked way, retired slowly to the farther end of the walk.

The action was so deliberate that I could not doubt he meant to slight me; and I paused where I was, divided between grief and indignation, a mark for all those glances and whispered gibes in which courtiers indulge on such occasions. The slight was not rendered less serious by the fact that the king was walking with my two colleagues; so that I alone seemed to be out of his confidence, as one soon to be out of his councils also.

I perceived all this, and was not blind to the sneering smiles which were exchanged behind my back; but I affected to see nothing, and to be absorbed in sudden thought. In a minute or two the king turned and came back towards me; again, as if he could not restrain his curiosity, looked up so that our eyes met. This time I thought that he would beckon me to him, satisfied with the lengths to which he had already carried his displeasure. But he turned again, with a light laugh.

OUR EYES MET.

At this a courtier, one of Sillery's creatures, who had presumed on the occasion so far as to come to my elbow, thought that he might safely amuse himself with me. "I am afraid that the king grows older, M. de Rosny," he said, smirking at his companions. "His sight seems to be failing."

"It should not be neglected, then," I said, grimly. "I will tell him presently what you say."

He fell back, looking foolish at that, at the very moment that Henry, having taken another turn, dismissed Villeroy, who, wiser than the puppy at my elbow, greeted me with particular civility as he passed. Freed from him, Henry stood a moment hesitating. He told me afterwards that he had not turned from me a yard before his heart smote him; and that but for a mischievous curiosity to see how I should take it, he would not have carried the matter so far. Be that as it may—and I do not doubt this any more than I ever doubted the reality of the affection in which he held me—on a sudden he raised his hand and beckoned to me.

I went down to him gravely, and not hurriedly. He looked at me with some signs of confusion in his face. "You are late this morning," he said.

"I have been on your majesty's business," I answered.

"I do not doubt that," he replied, querulously, his eyes wandering. "I am not—I am troubled this morning." And after a fashion he had when he was not at his ease, he ground his heel into the soil and looked down at the mark. "The queen is not well. Sillery has seen her and will tell you so."

M. de Sillery, whose constant opposition to me at the council board I have elsewhere described, began to affirm it. I let him go on for a little time and then interrupted him brusquely. "I think it was you," I said, "who nominated Ferret to be one of the king's clerks."

"Ferret?" he exclaimed, reddening at my tone, while the king, who knew me well, pricked up his ears.

"Yes," I said: "Ferret."

"And if so?" Sillery asked, haughtily. "What do you mean?"

"Only this," I said. "That if his majesty will summon him to the queen's closet, without warning or delay, and ask him in her presence how much Mme. de Verneuil gave him for the king's cipher, her majesty, I think, will learn something which she wishes to know."

"What?" the king cried. "You have discovered it? But he gave you a receipt for the papers he took."

"For the papers he took with my knowledge—yes, sire."

"The rogue!" Sillery exclaimed viciously. "I will go and fetch him."

"Not so—with your majesty's leave," I said, interposing quickly. "M. de Sillery may say too much or too little.

"WHAT!" THE KING CRIED, "YOU HAVE DISCOVERED IT."

Let a lackey take a message, bidding him to go to the queen's closet, and he will suspect nothing."

The king assented and bade me go and give the order. When I returned, he asked me anxiously if I felt sure that the man would confess.

"Yes, if you pretend to know all, sire," I answered. "He will think that madame has betrayed him."

"Very well," Henry said. "Then let us go."

But I declined to be present; partly on the ground that if I were there the queen might suspect me of inspiring the man, and partly because I thought that the rogue would entertain a more confident hope of pardon, and be more likely to confess, if he saw the king alone. I contrived to keep Sillery also; and Henry giving the word, as he mounted the steps, that he should be back presently, the whole court remained in a state of suspense, aware that something was in progress but in doubt what, and unable to decide whether I were again in favor or now on trial.

Sillery remained talking to me, principally on English matters, until the dinner hour; which came and went, neglected by all. At length, when the curiosity of the mass of couriers, who did not dare to interrupt us, had been raised by delay to an almost intolerable pitch, the king returned, with signs of disorder in his bearing; and, crossing the terrace in half a dozen strides, drew me hastily, along with Sillery, into the grove of white mulberry trees. There we were no sooner hidden in part, though not completely, then he threw his arms about me and embraced me with the warmest expressions. "Ah, my friend," he said, putting me from him at last, "what shall I say to you?"

"The queen is satisfied, sire?"

"Perfectly; and desires to be commended to you."

"He confessed, then?"

Henry nodded, with a look in his face that I did not understand. "Yes," he said, "fully. It was as you thought, my friend. God have mercy upon him!"

I started. "What?" I said. "Has he—"

The king nodded, and could not repress a shudder. "Yes," he said; "but not, thank Heaven, until he had left the closet. He had something about him."

Sillery began anxiously to clear himself; but the king, with his usual good nature, stopped him, and bade us all go and dine, saying that we must be famished. He ended by directing me to be back in an hour, since his own appetite was spoiled. "And bring with you all your patience," he added, "for I have a hundred questions to ask you. We will walk toward Avon, and I will show you the surprise which I am preparing for the queen."

Alas, I would I could say that all ended there. But the rancour of which Mme. de Verneuil had given token in her interview with me was rather aggravated than lessened by the failure of her plot and the death of her tool. It proved to be impenetrable by all the kindnesses which the king lavished upon her; neither the legitimation of the child which she soon afterwards bore, nor the clemency which the king—against the advice of his wisest ministers—extended to her brother Auvergne, availing to expel it from her breast. How far she or that ill-omened family were privy to the accursed crime which, nine years later, palsied France on the threshold of undreamed-of glories, I will not take on myself to say; for suspicion is not proof. But history, of which my beloved master must ever form so great a part, will lay the blame where it should rest.

A LITTLE THING.

Such a little thing hides the sun,
A sudden cloud or a wall of mist,
And we moan "The day is done!"
Such a little thing hides the sun, sweetheart,
The top of waving tree,
A summer shower, of the sunshine born,
A mist that dips in the sea.

Such a little thing hides the sun, sweetheart,
But isn't it joy to know
That the sun still shines behind the clouds;
That the soft, warm winds will blow
Till the wall of mist shall be blown aside
And the shadows flee away,
And the sun behind the western hills
Gives pledge of a brighter day!

KID GLOVES.

Interesting Facts About the Skins Which Cover or Adorn the Hands.

Barefooted boys and hens form a curious partnership in the making of a pair of fine gloves.

They work together in preparing the skins for the hands of the fashionable woman who rushes to the stores every time a new shade of glove is announced.

Thousands of dozens of hens' eggs are used in curing the hides, and thousands of boys are employed to work the skins in clear water by treading on them for several hours.

When a woman buys a pair of gloves, she speaks of her purchase as "kids." If the clerk who sold her the "kid" gloves knew the secrets of the glove-making business, he might surprise his fair customer by telling her that those beautiful, soft, smooth fitting "kid" gloves came from the shoulders and belly of a 3-weeks-old colt whose neck was slit on the plains of Russia, and whose tender hide was shipped with huge bundles of other colts' hides to France, where they were made up into "kid" gloves, or he might with equal regard to the truth tell her that those gloves in the other compartment once darted from tree to tree in South America on the back of a ring tailed monkey. And if he made the rounds of the store and could distinguish one skin from another he could point out "kid" gloves made from the skins of kangaroos from Australia; lambs or sheep from Ohio or Spain or England; calves from India, muskrats from anywhere, musk oxen from China and other parts of Asia; rats, cats and Newfoundland puppies.

But the little Russian colt, the four footed baby from the plains where the Cossacks live, the colt from the steppes of Siberia, where horses are raised by the thousand, supply the skins which are the favorites at present with the glovemakers. Experts say that the colt-skin makes a better, stronger, finer glove than real kidskin, and as the colt is a little fellow only 3 weeks old when he is killed but a small amount of skin can be made into gloves, so that the price is about as high.

But, after all, the real kid, the lively infant of the goats which live in France, Switzerland, Spain and Italy, furnishes the best, finest and most expensive gloves, and nearly 10,000,000 kids are sacrificed every year in order that women and men may cramp their hands in wrinkleless, delicate hued gloves.—Chicago Record.

The Old Time Singing School.

In the old colonial days when the great and the great-great-grandmothers were young the singing school was a well established institution, writes Mary E. Estes in a very accurate article telling exactly how "the old time concert" may be reproduced at a church entertainment in Ladies' Home Journal. It was usually held in the village schoolhouse, the schoolmaster often figuring as the singing master. Thither at regular intervals through the long winter months tripped the grandmas with their escorts. Little did they imagine as they lifted up their sweet voices in unison with the strong tenors and bassos that those same airs, even the very gowns they wore, would at some distant day be reproduced for the benefit of an appreciative audience. Yet it may be safely asserted that with the exception of the colonial tea the old folks' concert is the most popular of the old time entertainments.

The success of an undertaking of this sort depends largely upon the adaptability for her office of the person having the affair in hand. She must of necessity have an accurate conception of the manner in which these entertainments were conducted in our grandmothers' day. She must also become thoroughly imbued with the spirit of bat olden time.

CLUBS OF EVE'S DAUGHTERS.

How the Woman's Club Movement Has Grown in the State, With Plainfield As Its Centre.

Now that State Federation in New Jersey is an accomplished fact, and while we are all congratulating ourselves upon the formation of a new association which will, we believe, prove a blessing and power in the land, it seems a fitting moment for the chairman of correspondence to say somethings about the clubs of the State and about the origin of the movement for State Federation.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who visited the Monday Afternoon Club of Plainfield about the time when the General Federation of Women's Clubs was formed, told us of the plan to form a State Association in Massachusetts, a plan the execution of which was deferred for some time, in order not to interfere with the G. F. W. C. movement. The chairman of correspondence for New Jersey, at an early period of her work, came to the conclusion that a State federation, auxiliary to the National, would be a very desirable thing in a compact little State like ours, and the luncheon given by the Monday Afternoon Club of Plainfield, at which delegates from the various New Jersey clubs were present, may be said to have been the first step toward State federation (the president of the club being at that time the chairman of correspondence also).

The Monday Afternoon Club of Plainfield shares with the Orange Club the honor of being a charter member of the G. F. W. C. It was organized in 1868, being the outgrowth of mothers' meetings, at which educational subjects were discussed. The founder was Miss Eliza Elvira Kenyon. In imitation of the Orange Club (who placed the name of Mrs. Louisa L. Riley as that of their founder in their club Manual), the Monday Afternoon Club inscribed her name and title in their Year Book, a custom which it might be well for other clubs to follow. The result of the "rotation in office" theory sometimes reminds one of the ingratitude of Republics The Monday Afternoon Club is extremely popular in Plainfield, and though its membership has increased from 75 to 125, there is still a formidable waiting list. The yearly fee, $5, is rather large for a suburban club; but it enables the club to engage the services of the best lecturers, and to pay them the prices they ask. The club depends largely upon home talent, however, which furnish our bill of fare for about ten out of our fifteen meetings for study. A peculiar feature of our club was its "shadow", a club of gentlemen who discussed the subjects upon our programme.

A course of three lectures by John Fiske, to which our fellow-townspeople were invited without charge, was a feature of last year's work. "The Silent Classes of the Nation", proved full of interest, the Indians, the Chinese, and the women being the three classes considered. Contrary to all expectation the debate on the Chinese was more animated than on woman suffrage.

The Club of Current Events has a cosey membership of twenty-five, all residents of Washington Park, Plainfield. It is generous and hospitable, however, in inviting guests to be present at its social meetings and lectures, and we are glad to avail ourselves of this very agreeable privilege. The club was founded in 1891. Every member must serve on a standing committee (of which there are seven this year, numbered from A to G) and take her part in providing the club's programme. In addition to current events, which are presented at every meeting, some special subject is studied. For the present year architecture was the main topic during several weeks. Political economy is now occupying the attention of the club, and on March 6 an interesting programme of "British Essayists" will begin.

Two Great Stars in "Two Orphans".

In "The Two Orphans" in Music Hall tonight, Mme. Janauschek will be seen for the first time in Plainfield in the role of Countess de Linieres. She invests the part with an unwonted dignity and impressiveness, and in the great climax at the end of the fifth act she rises to the heights of emotional power to which she has accustomed us. The spiritual meaning of those cries of anguish, that rigidity of the strong countenance, are beyond praise, and thrilling. Miss Claxton's impersonation needs scarce a word. It has the same aerie charm and soft appealingness as ever, and shows the actress in a part that is perfectly adapted to her.

MANY CASES IN COURT.

Plainfield Attorneys Bring Various Suits for Damages.

Reed & Coddington have brought important suits in various courts as stated below:

Suit in Supreme Court today of August Bloom against Plainfield Street Railroad Company for personal injuries sustained about one year ago by a car striking plaintiff's wagon, dragging him on the ground and inflicting injuries which caused rupture and other complications. Suit brought for $2,000.

Also in Supreme Court, the suit of Henry L. Kline against Plainfield Street Railroad Company for personal injuries received by plaintiff on Somerset street last August by which arm and shoulder were so bruised as to render him unable to work. Suit brought for $1,000.

For Messrs. Tilden & Co., of Albany, N. Y., a suit on contract against Edward J. Richards, and for George T. Gambrill of Baltimore, Md., a suit on contract against Daniel Crowley.

In Justice Court the suit of Mr. Swody of Warrenville against The Plainfield Electric Light Company, for injuries to plaintiff's horse, which, while standing in front of Arnold's store last Summer received an electric shock which caused him to run, breaking wagon and causing other damage. Suit for $200.

In Chancery Court the case of Mary L. Force against Frank P. Huff and others, the papers of which were served last week by Sheriff Kyte. The suit involves $4,000.

Sale of the Bartlett Estate.

(From The New York Advertiser.)

Quite different was the management of the Abner Bartlett estate sale where everything on the catalogue was sold from beginning to end. And yet right here an entire and sudden postponement, if proposed, would not have been found fault with. For on the morning of the sale the widow of the late owner, Mrs. Medora Bartlett, mother of Abner Bartlett, Jr., of Plainfield, had died, which fact gave sadness to the proceedings. But then it was a matter of keeping faith with the people who had come from all parts of the city to ascertain what the Bartlett property would sell for, and the sale went right along and showed the justness and accuracy of the investor's original judgment. Though most of it was in off-color localities, over $220,000 was realized, the best price paid being $68,000 for the southeast corner of Rivington and Attorney streets.

A Stallion Runs Away.

Shortly after 4 Saturday afternoon a stallion owned by John Johnson of Dunellen, and driven by his man Peter, got beyond his control just as he turned the corner of Watchung avenue, and started up Second street at a lively gait. He narrowly escaped being thrown as he ran by Carty & Stryker's wagon which was hitched near their store, and slightly scratched it as he flew past. The runaway hugged the curb until he passed New street, where the front wheel of the vehicle came in collision with a telegraph pole and the horse stopped back of a delivery wagon which was fortunately hitched to a post but a short distance further up Second street. Peter was badly frightened, but escaped injury. Mr. Johnson, who had stopped for a few minutes at Lawyer DeMeza's office, was notified, and left the damaged carriage in Plainfield for repairs.

Cub of Bear and Haunch of Moose.

W. K. McClure and Randolph M. Stelle are still telling of the glories of the last Megantic Club dinner which they attended in Boston. Mac is always greeted with particular warmth at these gatherings because he never misses one of them, in spite of the distance he has to travel. The banquet this year was held in Hotel Vendome, and the menu was a true sportsman's bill. Besides the dishes it contained a photograph of the elegant assortment of game displayed in front of the club-house after the latest hunt. The songs and speeches filled the next day's issues of the Boston newspapers, and you may be sure that the Plainfielders gave good account of themselves. The Megantic is a great institution, and McClure is its Depew.

Lectured and Released.

Christopher Russ, who was arrested Saturday by Policeman Cooney for being drunk and disorderly, was given a hearing before Judge Coddington this morning. Russ pleaded guilty to the chage, but on the evidence of his employer in the Potter Press Works that he was the only support of his mother and sister, and because of other mitigating circumstances in the case, the Judge suspended sentence, first, however, giving the young man fatherly advice.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

FOR SHOOTING EVANS.

The Boys Kane and Walsh Indicted and Admitted to Bail.

In the indictments against Peter Kane and James Walsh, for the manslaughter of Morres Evans, for which the boys were arrested and lodged in jail Saturday night, bail will be fixed by the Court today through the influence of Reed & Coddington, who have been retained to represent the boys in the case.

Chief Grant's Timely Services.

Mrs. Albert, with her daughter and son, drove from Scotch Plains to Plainfield Saturday night to do their shopping. After they had transacted their business they started for home, and when they reached Coles's Hill on East Front street, a horse and wagon coming in the opposite direction, in which were two young men under the influence of liquor, collided with them. Mrs. Albert was thrown out and sustained several bruises. The children escaped injury.

A colored man happened to be driving along at the time, and seeing the accident, gave assistance. In the meantime Mrs. Albert's rig had got away. Mrs. Albert secured the services of the colored man to bring her back to Plainfield, where she sought Captain of Police G. W. Grant.

He, in company with Policeman Frederickson, got a horse and wagon and started after the young men. After a search they were informed that the lost rig was in front of Griffin's hardware store. They came back and found the wagon there.

Mrs. Albert and her children succeeded in getting home at a late hour. The young men, it is understood, are well-known in Plainfield.

Kellar Tomorrow Night.

Feight of hand and strength of intellect are combined in Kellar, the prince of living wonder workers, who will be seen in Music Hall tomorrow night with the entire new and marvelous performance which he has just perfected after a season of original research in the old world into the very latest achievements of magical art. "The Mystic Light of Bala" has baffled every plausible explanation. "The Shrine of Koomra Samil" cannot fail to amaze and delight American audiences, the most critical in the world. "The Talking Image" is as marvelous as it appears to be simple. These are only the leading novelties of the most remarkable programme ever offered in this city.

Solomon—Evans.

The marriage of Miss Eva Evans, daughter of the late Morres Evans, to Samuel Solomon, took place yesterday afternoon at 5, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Bloch, corner of Second and Liberty streets. Rabbi Gororwitz officiated. The joyousness of the wedding was subdued by the sad absence of the lamented father who had planned the wedding and had anticipated with much joy the coming event before his sudden death. In consequence of the recent bereavement the affair was a quiet one. A large number of friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony.

Lost Her Shopping Money.

Mrs. Radin of North avenue went to New York a few days ago to do some shopping. She had about $30 in her pocketbook. When she left the cars at Jersey City she dropped the pocketbook from her lap, but did not miss it till she reached New York. The loss was advertised, but she has not recovered her money.

About a year ago Mrs. Radin had a similar misfortune, when she lost all the money she had with her, and was obliged to return home without her purchases.

The Verdi Quartette.

The Montclair Herald speaks thus of the Ladies Quartette of Brooklyn, which will appear in the new Y. M. C. A. Hall February 5: "The Verdi Ladies Quartette will not soon be forgotten by those who were so fortunate as to hear them sing at the Club last Monday evening. It is seldom that four such fine well trained voices are found in any quartette. Each lady is a soloist."

Profits, $125.

Notwithstanding the fact that the tea of the Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed Church was not as well patronized as it should have been, Mrs. E. T. VanWinkle, chairman of the committee who worked so hard for its success, is rejoicing in the fact that about $125 was realized as the result of their labors.

He Is a Rev.

A surprise to most Plainfield people will be the announcement that D. A. MacPhie, physical instructor of the Y. M. C. A., is, besides being a Christian gentleman, a minister of the Gospel, and entitled to the prefix Rev. He preached yesterday in the Westfield Presbyterian Church.

—The Epworth League of Monroe Avenue Chapel will give an entertainment tomorrow night; and Monday night, Feb. 4, the Ladies Aid Society of Monroe Chapel will give an entertainment.

RETURN OF NEW YORK TROOPS.

Practical End of the Trolley Strike in Brooklyn.

After exactly one week's service in maintaining order in the streets of Brooklyn, the troops began to move homeward this morning, the trolley strike being practically over; all but three of the various branches of the three systems which were tied up two weeks ago were in operation, and 616 cars out of a compliment of 985 were running almost on the full day schedule.

Confirmation by the Bishop.

At the new Episcopal Parish of St. Stephen's, Netherwood, Sunday afternoon for the first time in its history was performed the holy rite of confirmation by Rt. Rev. John Scarborough, Bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey. The attendance was large many having come from Plainfield, the result being the necessity of some standing, every seat being occupied.

Seven candidates presented themselves at the altar a worthy token of the faithful work of their pastor Rev. S. P. Simpson, and were duly received and confirmed by the bishop, after which he gave words of encouragement to those who had thus early taken upon themselves the responsibilities of the Christian life, and to the congregation and members of the church the bishop gave his sincerest congratulations upon the step they had taken in thus assuming the dignity of a parish church. In concluding the venerable bishop referring to the prayers offered for one who had recovered from sickness, said that he took it to himself as being especially fitting to his case how but a short time ago his life seemed almost gone, but now through God's mercy he was again able to be about his Master's work. And he further said the coming Sunday will complete the twentieth year of his consecration, and at which time he proposes, God willing, to again present himself at the altar of St. Mary's Church, Burlington, where he originally made his vows.

The church was still in its Christmas decoration of greens and holly. The music was presided over by Mr. Wheeler and the usual number of the surplice choir. The closing hymn "Oh Mother Dear Jerusalem" was heartily sung by all present with an enthusiasm that spoke well for the interest of those in attendance.

The Meeting to Be a Rouser.

At the meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, Tuesday evening, Feb. 5, it is expected that delegations from Hugh B. Reed Camp, No. 40, of Somerville, and from the Flemington Camp, will be present.

The members of both Grand Army posts and the Women's Relief Corps will also be invited. Several good speakers will be present and a rousing meeting is anticipated.

Encouraging Optimism.

All things are ordered for the best,
The optimistic man maintains,
A theory that daily test
With oft-arising doubt arraigns,
But when he orders coal, he knows
He'll find endorsement of his view
If he to Geo. O. Stevens goes—
West Front St., near Grant avenue.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; your price 45c and 90c

WAR SEEMS INEVITABLE

Mexico Will Not Arbitrate the Pending Trouble.

Prophesied That She May Settle the Boundary Dispute with Guatemala by Appropriating the Whole Republic — Great Activity at the Government Arms Factory.

St. Louis, Jan. 28.—A special from the City of Mexico says: Nothing is heard here now but rumors of war, which seems inevitable. All the opposition papers are siding with the Diaz government and some extravagant proffers of aid are made from foreign residents. E. C. Ord Post of the G. A. R., has passed resolutions of fealty to the government. A number of union veterans, including an American general have signified their willingness to go to the front for Mexico if their services will be accepted.

The memorial will be presented to General Diaz to-morrow by a committee from the post, consisting of General Agramonte and Col. W. J. De Gress. Captain McDonald, of the Texas rangers, has tendered his services to Col. R. S. Pate, with 200 scouts, in case of war. Col. Pate served with Gen. Joe Shelby in Mexico at the close of the civil war, and at his call thousands would cross the line.

The president and several members of the cabinet were in secret session all day. It is stated the government is now studying the treaty of 1882, which Guatemala ignores. Article four in the treaty calls for arbitration. It is rumored that Mexico will not arbitrate. The feeling is general here among the Americans that Mexico's cause is right.

Should war break out between Mexico and Guatemala this country would be entirely prepared for the emergency and would have its 20,000 troops now on the Guatemalan frontier ready to move on the enemy at an hour's notice, without waiting for supplies or having other hindrances.

The rifles used in the Mexican army are Remingtons, and additional supplies are on hand for the arming of any additional troops which may be put into the field. Appearances are that Mexico will operate on both the north and west sides of Guatemala for the invasion of that republic should occasion demand. It is prophesied in some quarters that Mexico will settle the boundary line dispute by appropriating the whole Guatemalan republic as a part of the United States of Mexico with the City of Mexico as its capital.

Great activity is evident at the government arms factory in this city. Fifty thousand cartridges for the use of the Mexican army are being turned out every week, and these are being rushed to the Guatemalan border, with other supplies, as fast as steam and sail can carry them.

There was a marked silence about the government offices yesterday in connection with the Guatemalan episode. The same guarded attitude is felt when one is in the presence of those in a position to know what is the exact state of affairs and a generally uncommunicative policy is shown. The exceeding delicacy of the situation is evidently fully appreciated as is also the knowledge that a slip of the tongue or a miss-step at this moment may plunge affairs into a crisis most grave in its results.

Washington, Jan. 28.—No confirmation of the report that the efforts of the United States government to secure the consent of the governments of Mexico and Guatemala to refer the existing difficulties between them to a third party for settlement had proved successful could be had last night.

Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, said he had received no information from his government. In the circumstances surrounding the matter the minister begged to be excused from discussing the aspects of the situation, further than to say that while it was critical he did not despair of an amicable adjustment being reached by the representatives of the two countries.

The Mexican officials, he said, were proceeding with prudence and with a due care for the best interests of the nation and he hoped to be advised of a satisfactory settlement.

Arms for Mexico.

San Francisco, Jan. 28.—The steamer St. Paul just sailed for Mexican ports had in its cargo thirty-three cases of cartridges, one case rifles and one of shells. They were to be landed at Mazatalan. The shipment was hurriedly taken to the steamer and stowed so it would be reached quickly when the vessel reaches the port to which it was consigned.

Caught in the Ice.

Babylon, L. I., Jan. 28.—Captain John Arnold, of this place, had a narrow escape from perishing in the bay Saturday night. He was caught in an ice floe and could neither retreat or advance, and if other bay men had not worked for hours to save him he would undoubtedly have perished.

British Steamer in Collision.

London, Jan. 28.—The British steamer Michigan, Capt. Findlay, which sailed from this port on the 25th inst., for Baltimore, has returned here, having been in collision with an unknown steamer off Dungeness. The Michigan's starboard bow is cut down to the water's edge.

Hotel Castle Partly Burned.

New York, Jan. 28.—A fire caused by a lace curtain blowing into a lighted gas jet on the fourth floor of the Hotel Castle, corner of 103d street and Amsterdam avenue last night, caused a loss of fully $100,000.

MANY LIVES IN PERIL

Nine Scows and Two Barges Adrift Off the Coast.

New York, Jan. 28.—There are nine scows and at least two barges adrift or ashore off the coast as the result of the terrific southwester which has been raging since early Saturday evening off the Jersey and Long Island shores.

Early on Saturday afternoon the Mutual Towing company's tug Governor, Capt. Reynolds, started for sea with the two city dumping scows Nos. 2 and 12. The dumps are provided with patent mechanical dumping and were loaded heavily with city refuse.

When about ten miles off shore, at a point off Rockaway, the men on the vessels were signalled to empty the scows. The levers were thrown, and as the scows released of their heavy loads of refuse, rose high in the air a greatly increased area of hull was presented to the howling gale.

The line soon parted and the scows drifted into the breakers on Rockaway shoals. The crew of the Governor made several ineffectual attempts to pass the drifting scows a line, but were prevented by the turbulent waters. The gale became so severe that the captain was compelled to look for shelter in the lower bay.

The scows are staunch and may ride the gale. There are two men on each of them, all Americans, and nothing had been heard of them this morning.

The other scows broke their anchorage on Saturday night and had one man on each of them. Tugs have gone to their rescue, but as yet nothing has been heard of them.

THE COLOMBIA REVOLUTION.

No Official Notification Received as Yet at Washington.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Official notification of the revolution in the United States of Colombia has not yet been given to the heads of departments in Washington, and in the absence of it they decline to discuss the situation as outlined in unofficial dispatches. It is known that in some official circles the opinion is held that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty does not require the United States to maintain a vessel at the Isthmus. However that may be, Secretary Herbert stated that the government has three ships available for orders, which could reach Colon at a few days notice.

The Colombian legation in this city is in charge of Senor Don Julio Rengifo, secretary, who had no news to impart last night. The minister, Senor Don Jose Marcelino Hurtado, has been absent more than a year on a special mission to Rome, but is expected to return to Washington in a short time, having completed his work at the Italian capital.

As a result of his mission there, the president of the United States will be called upon to arbitrate the differences between Italy and Colombia. Thy grew out of a claim made against Colombia by a subject of Italy, whose property was seized by the government of that country after a revolution in which it was charged the Italian took part.

AMPUTATED HIS OWN FOOT.

Farmer Galbraith's Successful Operation with a Razor.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 28.—Two years ago Robert Galbraith aged 74, a farmer of Payne township, Indiana county, fell from a load of hay and injured his left ankle and foot. The injury has caused him great suffering ever since, and the family physician has long insisted that unless the foot was amputated, the farmer could never be any better. Galbraith stubbornly refused to have the operation performed. One morning last week the farmer's daughter went into his room.

"Delia," said he, "the jobs done. The foot is amputated." On the bed by his side, lay his foot. On the other side was a razor. The old farmer had amputated his own foot with his razor and had done it neatly too, at the ankle joint. Although he is now 76 years old Farmer Galbraith is not even suffering from shock from his self-amputating operation, and the doctor says he could not have taken the foot off more neatly himself.

SURROUNDING WEI-HAI-WEI.

Japanese Fleet in Shantung Bay While Troops Are Advancing.

London, Jan. 28.—A dispatch to the Central News from Che-Foo says that Wei-Hai-Wei was invested yesterday by a fleet of twenty Japanese warships, nineteen transports and twenty torpedo boats which entered Shantung bay. The English and German flagships are also in the vicinity.

The land forces of the Japanese are now advancing from the bay, intending to completely surround the city.

Death of a Well Known Minister.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 28.—Rev. F. G. Hibbard, D. D., of Clifton Springs is dead, aged 84 years. He was one of the best known ministers of the Methodist Episcopal church in New York state and was also widely known throughout the denomination over the country. He was an ecclesiactic author and editor of note.

Gale on the Newfoundland Coast.

St. John's N. F., Jan. 28.—Fierce south-westerly gales swept the coast yesterday. It is expected that considerable damage to shipping was done. The Allen liner Corean left here at daylight, bound for Liverpool, and must have experienced the full brunt of the storm.

TRANQUIL IN BROOKLYN

Little Disorder and Very Few Arrests Made.

The Pulpits Discuss the Strike Question — Many Organizations Vote Substantial Assistance to the Men —Central Labor Union Orders a Boycott on the Trolley Lines.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The third week of the biggest strike that the city has ever known began yesterday with a quiet Sunday. There was no serious disturbance.

All the saloons were so tightly closed that it was the driest Sunday on record in the City of Churches. One or two arrests only were made for violation of the excise law.

The militia were kept indoors more than on any other day since the strike began. A large number of soldiers were given a few hours' leave of absence in order to visit their relatives.

Some little stone throwing was indulged in and a few accidents to cars on account of green motormen occurred, but nothing of a serious nature happened to mar the serenity of the city. The service on the lines was the best of any day yet, and the companies claim that the strike is broken.

Sermons were preached at nearly all the churches in which the strike was mentioned. Dr. Lyman Abbott deprecated the interference with law and order. The Rev. A. C. Dixon scored the railroad corporations for their stubborn refusal to arbitrate differences with their employes. The Rev. Father O'Hare, of Greenpoint, counseled moderation.

The strikers have a new move in contemplation. They have consulted lawyers and have decided to begin suits against the Brooklyn Heights company for one week's pay for each of the 1,600 men formerly in the employ of the road. They claim that the laws of this state entitle them to one week's notice, and claim that they were locked out without warning. The suits are to be brought in batches of 100 at a time, beginning to-morrow or Wednesday. They also propose to begin action against the company for violations of the ten-hour law. There is a $500 penalty for each offense against this law. They say that 1,600 of them will bring suits, and the company will be mulcted $800,000. Lawyer M. L. Towns, who was one of the counsel in the mandamus proceedings, has charge of the proposed suits and action for damages. He sent a note to Mr. Hadden Crowell, president of the Long Island Trust company, and trustees for the bondholders of the railroad, requesting Mr. Crowell to call at his residence and see if some arrangement could not be made. Mr. Crowell replied by letter referring Mr. Towns to Thomas S. Moore, counsel for the road.

There is also talk of suits for damages against the trolley companies by the shopkeepers and merchants whose business has been seriously affected during the past two weeks by the failure of the companies to run their cars as usual. It is claimed that Judge Gaynor's mandamus ordering the companies to operate their lines and furnish the same accommodation to the public that they did before January 14, furnishes a basis for these damage suits which may mount up into the millions.

All was quiet at Halsey street and Broadway last evening. The only incident was the scattering of the crowds congregated there by the mounted police.

At Ridgewood everything was quiet and orderly. At Alabama avenue and Fulton street there was no excitement and all was quiet. At Broadway ferry the situation remained unchanged.

A conductor of the crosstown line reported all quiet and orderly in Greenpoint. Lieutenant Grealish, of the 69th battalion, reported everything quiet at the station at Gates and Ralph avenues, and at all points protected by that battalion.

New York, Jan. 28.—The Central Labor union has declared a boycott on the Brooklyn trolley lines, whose men are now on strike, and any member of the union who is caught riding on the forbidden cars will be subjected to a fine of $5. Many contributions from labor organizations were received. Typographical union No. 96 sent its check for $200, the Lacemakers union one for $20, the Horseshoers union $200, Bookbinders union $76.50, and the Cigarmakers union $87. Another meeting will be held to-morrow evening, when an assessment will be made upon each member, the fund thus raised to be given to the striking motormen and conductors. District Assembly No. 49, Knights of Labor, have voted $800 a week to the trolley car strikers in Brooklyn, during the strike.

Steel Mill To Resume.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 28.—The billet mill of the Pennsylvania Steel works which has been idle for the past seven weeks, will resume tomorrow, giving employment to about 100 men. Number 2 blast furnace will be blown in this week, employing about 60 men. It is the largest furnace at the steel works, having a capacity of 200 tons a day.

COULD HARDLY BREATHE.

Catarrh of the Nose, Throat, and Stomach—Life Made Miserable by Headaches, Pain and Cough.

Lida McCandless, No. 1230 South Thirtyfifth street, Philadelphia, in conversation with a reporter, said: "I had a very bad case of catarrh of the nose, throat and stomach, with frequent headaches, pain under the shoulder blades and a horrible cough. I had to keep my mouth constantly open day and night to breathe, and felt as miserable as one possibly could. I was advised to try Munyon's Catarrh Cure. I am happy to say that from the beginning I felt relieved and continued to grow better until now I am entirely well. I am so thankful that this remarkable remedy was ever discovered, and hope others will take advantage of my experience."

Have you Catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures Catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the affected parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

All that's Yellow is not Cottolene

There's hardly a housekeeper in the country but has heard of Cottolene the new vegetable shortening. It is a strictly natural product; composed only of clarified cotton seed oil, thickened for convenience in use, with refined beef suet, pure and sweet. So composed,

COTTOLENE

Was bound to win, and to drive out lard from the kitchens of the world. When housekeepers wish to get rid of the unpleasant features and results of lard, they should get Cottolene, taking care that they are not given cheap imitations with vegetable names, spuriously compounded to sell in the place of Cottolene.

It's easy to avoid disappointment and ensure satisfaction. Insist on having Cottolene.

THE TARANTULA KILLER.

A Giant Wasp that Stings the Big Spider to Death.

The tarantula is a large burrowing spider which dwells in a shaft-like hole it sinks in the earth. Its appearance is most repulsive, and inspires any one who examines it with a feeling of profound disgust. As it stands, it frequently covers an area as large as the palm of a man's hand, and over its body and legs there bristles a thick covering of red-brown hair. It may be said that its home is in many lands, but its greatest size is attained in tropical and semi-tropical countries. In the south of Europe, along the Mediterranean coast, it has been known for centuries as the "mad spider," because the symptoms following its bite are similar to those of hydrophobia. There the peasantry, especially those of Sicily, regard it with mingled feelings of hate and superstitious dread.

Yet, notwithstanding all its great courage and pugnacity, there is one enemy the sound of whose coming throws it into paroxysms of fear. This enemy, of which it has an instructive dread, is a large wasp, known as "the tarantula killer." It has a bright blue body, nearly two inches long, and wings of a golden hue. As it flies here and there in the sunlight, glittering like a flash of fire, one moment resting on a leaf, the next on a granite boulder, it keeps up an incessant buzzing, which is caused by the vibration of its wings. No sooner does the tarantula hear this than he trembles with fear, for well he knows the fate in store for him when once his mortal foe perceives his whereabouts. This it soon does, and hastens to the attack. At first it is content with flying in circles over its intended victim. Gradually it approaches nearer and nearer. At last, when it is within a few inches, the tarantula rises upon his hind legs and attempts to grapple with his foe, but without success. Like a flash the giant wasp is on its back. The deadly fangs have been avoided. The next instant a fearful sting penetrates deep into the spider's body.

Its struggles almost cease. A sudden paralysis creeps over it and it staggers, helpless like a drunken man, first to one side then to the other. These symptoms, however, are only of short duration. While they last the wasp, but a few inches away, awaits the result; nor does it have to wait long. A few seconds and all sign of life has disappeared from the tarantula; the once powerful legs curl up beneath its body, and it rolls over dead.

Then takes place one of the most strange incidents which illustrate the perfect adaptation to circumstances, everywhere so remarkable in the economy of the insect world. The wasp seizes hold of the now prostrate spider, and with little apparent effort drags it to a hole in the ground. Therein it completely buries it with earth, after having first deposited in its back an egg, which in course of time changes into a grub, and lives upon the carcass in which it was born. This grub in a short time becomes another tarantula wasp, thus adding one more to the ranks of the enemy of the spider race.

The amount of slaughter which these large wasps inflict upon the tarantulas is almost incredible, and it is noticed that those to which the greatest destruction is due are the females. It can only be realized when we know that though the female deposits but one egg in each spider, she has a large number to get rid of, each one of which she provides with a home, and its grub with future sustenance at the expense of the life of a spider.

Wild Horses of Wyoming.

A gentleman from Wyoming tells me there are at least 20,000 horses running wild in that state and in Idaho and Nevada, this winter, many of them without a brand.

They have been turned out to take care of themselves because there is no sale for them at any price out there, and they will not bring enough in the Eastern States to cover the expense of transportation.

The estimated cost of keeping horses over winter, including forage and attendance, is only two dollar a head, but their owners will not even invest that amount in them, for it would be money wasted. They will not bring one dollar a head in the spring.

The legislature of Nevada has passed a law authorizing the shooting of stallions running at large, which is considered necessary to restrict the natural increase.—Chicago Record.

Greeley's Eccentricities.

One of those men that is everlastingly noticing little things is authority for this statement:

"You rarely find a city man accustomed to solitude and leisure to be eccentric."

He might have gone further and add that most eccentricities are assumed. When Horace Greeley visited Chicago some years ago he was shown into a drawing room near the stage from which he was to lecture. One of the committeemen called for him rather unexpectedly, and found the philosopher of the Tribune giving one leg of his trousers that hitch for which it was noted, and also observed that Mr. Greeley had shoved his necktie out of place.

Pennsylvania Railroad Likes Electricity.

The action of the Pennsylvania Railroad in deciding to substitute electricity for steam on its branch line between Burlington and Mount Holly in New Jersey, is only one indication of the change now going on in the method of operating railroads.

At least two railroads near Boston now run by steam will soon be equipped with electricity, and if the changes prove profitable other lines will soon be operated on the same plan. This is said to be the purpose of the Pennsylvania Railroad also, the change projected on the New Jersey branch line being in the nature of an experiment.

Proof Against Ordinary Disease.

"You'd better go away. We've got the measles here," said the woman at the kitchen door.

"Madam," replied the tramp, seating himself on the step with great deliberation, "the only disease I am afraid of is appendicitis. I shall be obliged to ask you madam," he added, with dignity "not to give me cherry pie."—Chicago Tribune.

Willie's Reasoning Power.

"Isn't it bettah," said Willie Wishington to his father, "to let anything alone than to do it badly?"

"It certainly is," was the reply.

"Well, that's why I don't twy to make my own living."—Washington Star.

THE GOOD ANTHONY COMSTOCK ACCUSED OF BLACKMAIL.

The Censor of Theatrical Posters and Cold Statuary Denies the Charge Made Before the Lexow Committee. Goff Believes There is Rottenness in Denmark.

There is hardly a person in America who has not heard of Anthony Comstock. At the same time millions have read, the large majority with thankful hearts, of his work as secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and how he has tracked down and suppressed the nests of vice in New York and other cities where green goods operators, gamblers, thugs, bunco men, dealers in evil literature and pictures, lottery ticket fakirs, policy shops, and every other form of vice that existed under the nose of the police.

Mr. Comstock vigorously denies the story brought out before the Lexow Committee that he accepted a bribe of $1,000 to obtain the dismissal of an indictment against a printer of counterfeit money advertisements, but Mr. Goff, who must have known of the charges before they were made public, evidently attached some weight to them, else they would not have appeared. Mr. Comstock, who enjoys the moral support of the press of New York, has not taken the active means to bring his traducer to justice which he usually exhibits when engaged in clothing nude statues or suppressing questionable literature. This is the story as told by the report of the Lexow proceedings:

Mr. Goff then called Louis S. Streep, who told this story without question: In 1889 he was arrested by Anthony Comstock for printing green goods circulars. At that time, he said, he rented his printing office to a man named Bechtold, while he, the witness, was in the country. While he was in the Tombs Bechtold gave Streep's wife $3,000 in cash to deposit for her husband's bail. Before she deposited it Bechtold returned and got $2,000, saying that he had to give $1,500 to Anthony Comstock to prevent Streep's being indicted by the United States Grand Jury. Streep's bail was reduced at the same time to $3,000, and the cash was deposited. Streep jumped his bail and went to Europe. In July, 1890, he returned, went to the District Attorney of the county and confessed all he knew about the green goods circular business, and under the direction of the District Attorney made a search of the city with three Headquarters detectives for the men implicated by his confession. One day, after being out for many hours with detective Reilly, he called on Mr. Comstock, and said that now that he had arranged things honorably with the State officials he would like to get the indictment against him in the State courts dismissed.

"Comstock said to me, 'I am the only man who can get that indictment dismissed.' He said it could be done if I would give him $1,000. In August I called on Mr. Comstock with my brother and said to him, 'You said you could have that indictment in the State court dismissed. Here is a thousand dollars.' I had seven hundred dollars which my wife had realized from the sale of my printing office, and I borrowed three hundred dollars in three bills from my brother Robert, who was with me. Comstock took the money, saying, 'I am not accepting this as a bribe but as a donation to the society.'

Q.—And was the indictment dismissed?

A.—Yes, sir; two of them.

Q.—And you gave him that money to procure their dismissal?

A.—Yes, sir.

Mr. Goff—Here are the indictments endorsed "dismissed" at the time stated by the witness.

Senator Bradley—Who was the District Attorney then?

Mr. Goff—Col. Fellows.

Q.—Fully realizing your responsibility and the meaning of your answer, do you swear that you gave Anthony Comstock $1,000 for his influence in having these indictments dismissed?

A.—I swear before God and man I paid Anthony Comstock $1,000 to buy my liberty.

Senator Lexow—How do you bring this within the scope of our work, Mr. Goff?

Mr. Goff—I will explain in a moment, Senator.

Q.—Since then you've been indicted?

A.—Since then Anthony Comstock had me indicted on the same charge in the United States Court. I was convicted and am out pending an appeal.

Senator Lexow—How is this within our scope?

Mr. Goff—A failure to enforce the criminal laws is a neglect of duty by the Police Department. Also, we have shown that the police have protected the green goods men, and it is only fair to the police that we should show, if we can, that others have done the same.

Senator Lexow—It is a very serious charge against Mr. Comstock.

Law is law! Enforcement is enforcement! Laws were made for enforcement; not for reasonable enforcement. Law is absolute. Law is without qualification! Law is for the purpose of order—not a reasonable amount of order. Law is for the purpose of enabling men to enjoy equal opportunities of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Nothing is said about a reasonable amount of life or liberty or happiness.—Recorder Goff.

Faithful to its sacred page, heaven still rebuilds thy span, nor lets the type grow pale with age that first spoke peace to man.—Campbell.

MUSIC TRIED ON BEASTS.

Curious Effects of a Violin Upon Various Animals.

It is a well-known fact that many animals are susceptible to music. Many dogs will bark or howl at the strains of a mouth organ or melodeon while others protest vocally against piano playing, and few dogs can endure in silence the playing of minor chords. On the other hand, almost every woodsman will tell you that he can charm a chipmunk into appreciative attention by whistling a lively tune. Cats, too, are influenced by music, and many cases are on record of their fondness for piano playing, while violin music often stirs them to emulation, a fact which New England housewives ascribed to the sympathy existing between pussy alive and the parts of pussy dead that were fabled to furnish the fiddle strings. Experiment has shown that individual animals are peculiarly influenced to joy or sorrow by some one particular note, chord, or tone, while other music may have no effect upon them.

An Englishman, C. J. Cornish, has been making musical experiments on various kinds of animals at the Zoological Society's Gardens in London, and he writes most interestingly of them. With his violinist he went to the abode of the snakes, and the musician, hidden from the sight of his animal audience, began to play. Mr. Cornish writes of this:

"The dweller on the threshold of the snake's home is the monitor lizard, an active and formidable saurian, some five feet in length, whose watchful habits were said to give notice of the approach of the crocodile. It did not belie its reputation for watchfulness, for the instant it heard the sounds of the violin through its opened door it raised its head and stood alert and listening. Then the forked tongue came out and played incessantly round its lips; soft, slow music followed, and the lizard became quite still, except for a gentle swaying of the head from side to side."

Some blacksnakes in the same cage were similarly affected, although they were slower to show their appreciation. At first they raised their heads, waving them from side to side in an apparent endeavor to ascertain whence the sounds came. Having made up their minds, they set out one after another for the source, and nosed up and down the wall in the manner peculiar to serpents. A big boa constrictor, who had been asleep for some few days, uncurled himself preparatory to taking a glide all around the cage.

Suddenly the violinist swept his bow across the strings in a harsh and loud discord. The blacksnakes dropped their heads and hustled for the further corner. The boa stopped short and evinced an inclination to hurt somebody. As for the monitor lizard, he executed a startled flop and scuttled off with an air of disgust and alarm, declining thereafter to be coaxed back by the most alluring airs. His trust had been basely betrayed and he evidently didn't propose to put himself again in a position where he would be made a subject for practical jokes.

Selections from William Tell were tried upon the sheep and goats, and they were immensely pleased with the opera. At the Shepherd's Call they sniffed the air inquiringly and crowded up to the bars in a compact bunch. When the music stopped they voiced a unanimous request for more with a great acclaim of bleating and baaing. A lively measure brought them all back to the bars again except a few goats, who frisked about in the liveliest fashion, only to stop short with the cessation of the music.

HOW THEY HUSTLE IN THE WEST.

A Savings Bank Looks Around Variously for Customers.

The West in general considers itself to be a hustler, and the East is willing to admit that it is.

Western people explain their hustling propensities by saying that the East has two or three hours' start of them every day, so they must move lively if they want to keep up with the procession.

An example of Western hustling is a bank safe which the savings bank distributes among its customers and friends. It is described as a nickel-plated brass bank, with combination lock, and highly ornamental and convenient. It is lent to any one who will deposit or has a deposit of $2 in the savings bank, who must agree to save his spare money in the bank and bring it to the savings bank at least every three months. If the bank is lost the savings bank charges $2. Says the savings bank with winged words of wisdom:

You must hesitate to bring small amounts to a bank, but these bank safes you can have at your home, where you can deposit any amount and at any time when convenient.

Money deposited in the bank safe can only be taken out at our bank, as we keep the key, and when brought to us the money is counted in your presence and is placed to your credit on your pass book, where it draws interest.

Call and get one or more of these bank safes or boxes for yourself and children. They will help you save money and they will cost you nothing for their use.

NOT HIS STOVE.

One Experience of the Kind Years Ago Had Taught Him a Lesson.

A policeman who was patrolling his beat on Grove street the other evening came along to an old colored man who was leaning over his gate, and queried:

"Uncle, did you hear that explosion on this street last night?"

"A colored man's stove blew up."

"Stove blowed up! Whoo! Jist blowed right up, eh?"

"Yes; he got a stick of wood with powder in it, and it blew up his stove and almost ruined the house."

"Powder in de wood, eh? Got dat stick from some udder man's woodpile, did he? Who was de pusson, sah?"

"I don't know, but thought you could perhaps tell me."

"No, sah; I can't tell ye, kase I hain't heard o' no such case. Mebbe yo' dun reckoned it was me?"

"Well, I didn't know."

"But I knows, sah. Nuffin' like dat has happened to me fur de last twenty y'ars. When I libed down in Toledo I dun got blowed up with powder in a stick o' wood, jist like yo' bin tellin' 'bout, an' it l'arned me a lesson. Eber since dat I split de stick in two an' look for de powder. Shoo! Dat mus' hev been a fule nigger who got hold o' dat woodpile an' blowed hisself up.—Detroit Free Press.

REMARKABLE DEVOTION.

Old Amzi Just 'Spised His Master for a Too Nice Consideration.

Amzi was an old school negro, who regarded the emancipation proclamation with contempt, and neither threats nor bribes could have prevailed upon him to leave an indulgent master, whom he served with the most unselfish devotion. He was a little, dried-up, black and much wrinkled darky of uncertain age, whose religion consisted solely of blind adoration of "Marse Davy Jackson," whose playmate he had been in childhood, whose nurse he had been in illness, and whose personal attendant he had been through a four years' war.

Mr. Jackson was owner of a steam pack line, plying daily between Norfolk, Va., and Elizabeth City, N. C., through the Dismal Swamp canal, the principal revenue of which was derived from the carrying of the United States mail, Amzi being employed in the humble capacity of guard over the pouches.

The four years' contract had nearly expired, and a rival company, a stage coach line, was seeking to wrest the mail-carrying from the steamers. With a view to proving that the overland route was the more expeditious, and therefore more desirable, the stage raced with the steamer every day, and as the roadway followed the canal bank for twenty-two miles the contest became very exciting. The wheeled vehicle would usually forge ahead when the locks were reached, but as soon as released all steam would be crowded and the little boat would again be in the lead.

Amzi was, probably, the individual most concerned in these tests of speed, and he sought to incite the engineer to extreme effort by all sorts of threats and promises. He regarded the coaches with the utmost aversion and nearly wept in his distress lest his old master should lose his contract.

One day the contest had been unusually warm and close throughout the entire length of the canal and as they were drawing near the south mills, where the canal enters Pasquotank river, the stage was a good mile in the lead. Amzi was standing upon the rail swearing at the engineer and threatening the captain, when the boat lurched slightly and the negro was thrown into the water.

Immediately there was great confusion on board, for the old negro was revered by everyone, and it was known that he could not swim. Quickly as might be the steamer was stopped, a little yawl lowered, and Amzi, half drowned, was fished out of the water.

Scarcely did he reach the deck before he yelled out excitedly to the captain:

"Gin her two bells, you fool! Don you see dat dum stage erscootin'?"

Then he rushed to the window of the engineer and shook his fist savagely at that official.

"What fur you done stop dis yere boat? Ise done tell Marse Davy, 'n' den dere 'll be a 'ngineer projec'in' fur a job."

"But, Amzi," expostulated the engineer, "if I hadn't stopped you would have drowned."

"G'long. I jis' 'spises yer, I does, aspilin' time on one lazy nigger. Now you jis' heah me; you sen' up de steam whilst I squats on de safety valve, 'n' ef you heahs anybody else drappin' you leave 'em be."—Chicago Tribune.

Evidence of Disapproval.

"Well, yaas," drawled Chollie as he dangled his forty-seventh cigarette that morning between his dainty yellow fingers, "I like the young lady well enough, but I cawn't say that I am greatly enamoured of her mother, don't you know."

"Why not?" inquired the man in the next chair.

"Well, don't you know, I never go there to call that the old lady doesn't begin to sniff the air and get out of the room, and in a minute or two I can hear her calling to a servant to burn a rag in the house, don't you know."—Detroit Free Press.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

10 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly: they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J.

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

Chats Around the Radiator When the Men Were Off Duty.

"Brought in the Spree, did you?" asked the Long Jacket of the Slouch Hat, one rainy afternoon as we all sat around the steam pipes.

"No, she brought me in. Do you think I am Hercules? That's his specialty," answered the Slouch Hat.

"Tell the young man the Hercules' story."

"Get out; do you take me for a newspaper syndicate? Tell it yourself," rejoined the Long Jacket.

"Well," began the Slouch Hat, "Hercules is very fond of a joke, and he tells 'em a good deal better than anybody around here, for he's been at it, man and boy, ever since I remember. Several years ago there was a bit of scare about sickness on foreign ships. Hercules got the Spree. We'll call him Hercules because that isn't his name. It's something very like it, though. Well, as I was saying, Mr. Hercules boarded the Dutchman about two hundred miles out. There was sickness in the steerage and the health officer didn't do a thing but hold that same steamer for three days when she reached quarantine. Hercules was standing on the bridge that evening when the Spree got abeam the yellow house over on Staten Island, and whom does he see balancing and juggling around in a canoe below but his young neighbor, Johnson.

"'Hi, there, young man,' sings out Hercules, 'will you tell my wife that I'm detained at quarantine and won't be home to-night?'

"And Johnson, being an obliging young fellow, and thinking a good deal of Hercules, as everybody does, said 'yep' and pretty soon went in. And when he got home that night what does he do but forget all about that message until next day and then he goes over to our friend's house.

"'Mrs. Hercules,' he said, 'I saw your husband on the Spree and he does not know when he'll get back.'

"Well, as you may imagine, young man, Mrs. Hercules took on dreadfully, and when, after that steamer got out of quarantine, her husband came home she looked him over mighty careful.

"'Have a nice time?' she asked.

"'Never had a better in my life,' says he.

"'Who were with you?'

"'Oh, a great many ladies and gentlemen,' he answered.

"Then she told him what young Johnson had said. 'Well, my dear,' said Hercules, slow and deliberate like, 'young Johnson was quite right. I was on a Spree, but that young person neglected to say that it was the steamer Spree, and that I was in quarantine.'

"Then she didn't ask any more questions for awhile.

"'Women are curious,' remarked the bearded pilot. "But I tell you, man, they are the light of our lives. They do pester a fellow with questions, though, especially if that fellow is a pilot just come aboard the steamer they're on. Why, they light on you before you get over the rail. They want to know all about receptions, and horse shows, and campfire teas, and art exhibitions, and theaters, just as though they thought a pilot put in his time on shore going to swell society rackets. Now, of course, you've got to speak civil, for if a pilot was uncivil to a woman, and I never knew of one who was, why, she'd complain to the captain, and then there would be a row.'

"'Don't talk to me about women,' said he of the long jacket. 'The men ask just as many questions. If they meet a prize-fighter on board a steamer he wants to know how this and that slugger are training, and if it is likely that he can make a match with so-and-so, and what his chances are. Just as though a pilot were a walking compendium of reports. And then as likely as not some well groomed old chap will come up and ask you about the price of stocks, and the state of the market. 'My goodness!' I said to one of those broker chaps. 'I'm a pilot. That's the only kind of steering I know about.'

"Well, I don't blame people for being a bit curious when they've been at sea a week, with nothing to do but sleep and eat and sit on deck. And, young man, you ought to see them grab the newspapers. We always carry a file of papers, of course, and when the passengers get hold of them it's fun to see them diving into them.

Complimented.

She had married a young naval officer and was so pleased over it that she had gone with him into a little house on a side street and was running it herself.

"Have you any beans?" she inquired of the grocer's clerk during the first week of her incumbency.

"Do you wish navy beans?" he asked politely.

"Oh, certainly," she twittered. "How clever of you to guess we weren't army people."

And the clerk almost choked on the ball of twine he stuck in his mouth to control his emotions.—Detroit Free Press.

THE QUEEN BEE.

She Is the Foundation, the Life and Soul of a Hive Colony.

A queen bee is essential to the colony. She is readily picked out, but by a close observer by her great length. She lives generally for about five years, but her term of life varies in different individuals from two to five or six and in rare instances even to seven years. A queen is fed with the daintiest and best all through her embryo stage, and when hatched comes out a full queen. If any other queen is hatched—and sometimes one or two more are, pretty soon after—the rightful ruler assails the rival claimant in a life and death battle, the "stinger" being plied vigorously like a death dealing sword by both contestants, while the hive looks on in mute interest to see the issue of the battle. This is almost decided in favor of the assailant. She is then the undisputed queen and is so regarded. Yet the great company of "workers" are in some senses the real governors, and the hive is a great social democracy. If by any mischance the queen is killed, then the "workers"—who are undeveloped females—go to work to produce a new one. The egg they select for the trial is attended to with the same care, and the embryo bee is fed with the same selected food, as in the case of the egg that had produced the legitimate queen. It makes a queen, and she serves in that capacity.

Except in swarming time, the queen never leaves the hive, only on the one occasion of her bridal tour. Selecting some one for her husband, she invites him out to go with her—and their connubial relations are carried on entirely while on the wing in the air—like the chimney swallow's. The bridegroom never returns. He drops dead, and the queen returns from her one and only aerial excursion a fully fecundated bee, ready to begin her great life work of egg laying. Some days she will lay as many as 2,000 eggs; in all, about 20,000 eggs.

In "swarming" a large part of the whole crowd goes out. They leave behind the remains of the old colony, which had grown too numerous, thus compelling the "swarming" or seeking a new home by a great part of the hive. The queen goes with the swarmers, and here they follow closely. If she alights on a branch or other place, they all settle there, clinging closely together in a great mass, by much the same method as a mass of burdock burs will stick together, and the farmer's wife and "all hands" used to bang away on tin pans to govern the movements of the swarm by fright if possible.

So close does the swarm follow the queen that when once in flying over a lake the queen became weary and dropped into the water every bee went down with her to death by drowning.—New York Dispatch.

BRUSSELS AND TAPESTRY.

The Difference Between These Two Kinds of Carpets Explained.

By placing a brussels and tapestry carpet side by side a clearness and sharpness are noticed about the brussels carpet which are absent from the tapestry. In the latter there is a mistiness about the colors, and the pattern lacks that sharpness and delicacy which characterize the former. This is due to the process of manufacture. A brussels is a yarn dyed, and a tapestry may be described as a printed fabric, but the printing is done upon the yarn before the process of weaving.

The whole method of manufacture is most ingenious. In the making of a five frame brussels no fewer than 1,280 ends of face yarns are required for the weaving of one piece of standard quality, each frame consisting of 256 bobbins, and 256 ends only can come to the face at each pick of the pattern. Therefore 1,024 ends of yarn are hidden in the body of the fabric. There are many qualities of tapestry, but in the production of the standard quality only 216 ends of face yarn are required, instead of 1,280, which shows at once that the brussels carpet has the great advantage of being thicker, softer and altogether a more durable cloth apart from other advantages which it possesses. There is a limitation in the number of colors used in a brussels. In tapestry there is no limit. In the brussels the whole of the colors used show a more or less striped appearance at the back of the fabric.

In a tapestry they do not show at the back at all. This fact is made use of by householders in purchasing carpets, this being about the only way the average person can tell the difference between them. In order to pass off tapestry as brussels some ingenious makers have resorted to the striping in a regular manner of the backs of the former. The stripy effect in the latter is broken and irregular. A casual observation of the clearly defined character of a brussels pattern should enable a buyer to distinguish between the two fabrics.—Furnishers' Gazette.

Shakespeare and Bacon.

A famous historian well known personally in Boston told the following story when he was asked what he thought of the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy: "I was once librarian in a small town, and it was my custom to catalogue books on the real meaning of Daniel, astrology, modern spiritualism, etc., under the general head 'Insane Literature.' When any volume written in support of the Baconian theory appeared, I catalogued it under the same head."—Boston Journal.

Warned In Time.

"William," said Mrs. Youngwife from the head of the stairs to her husband, who had come home at an early hour in the morning, "there is some of my home-made cake in the pantry, a new kind that I made today. I put it where you can easily find it."

"All right, dear," responded Mr. Youngwife. "How considerate of you! I might have eaten some of it without thinking." And the grateful husband made a supper of cold beef.—Philadelphia Times.

THE GRAMMAR OF BABIES.

They Make Some of Their Own in Spite of All Precautions.

A month after our first baby was born we resolved to settle by experiment a question which we had discussed for months, namely, whether a child's tendency to violate the rules of grammar is innate or is acquired through the sense of hearing.

My wife declared that all children, no matter what their surroundings, will say: "Me wants sugar," until they are taught that it is proper to say: "I want sugar;" while I contended that a child would speak grammatically from the beginning if it were not permitted to hear any ungrammatical talk.

We had little difficulty in making the experiment thorough. We were living in a little cottage three miles from the nearest village. We had but one servant, an old negro, who did outdoor work exclusively and slept in an outhouse. Our only regular visitors were the doctor and the minister, both well-educated men; and we resolved that our boy should not be within earshot when anyone called whose ability to speak pure English could be disputed.

Of course we set a good example ourselves. We refrained from baby talk; used only the most polished language in the presence of our boy, and took particular pains to repeat before him in grammatical style those expressions which are usually the first in a child's vocabulary.

For instance, when he was less than a year old, he would sit in his mother's lap, staring at us, while I remarked seriously and with great distinctness: "I want no water;" and my wife would say in an equally impressive manner: "No, I do not want any."

Then when we thought that the little fellow must have gained some idea of the proper use of negatives, my wife would offer a suggestion of this sort: "William, the cups are empty;" and I would proclaim that "my hands are cold."

We knew it would be useless at that time to try to teach him anything, but I cherished an abiding faith that the memory of our polished conversation would remain with him. My wife had no such faith, but she adhered loyally to her agreement to make the experiment as thorough as possible.

When our boy had passed his fifteenth month we began to look forward anxiously to the result of the experiment. We were sure that never in his brief life had he heard an ungrammatical sentence, and we agreed that his first expression would forever settle the question involved.

When he was sixteen months old he began to name articles of food with some distinctness. A month later he could couple two words. Then came the climax. He was just eighteen months and twelve days old when he launched his first sentence, and, I may add, knocked my pet theory into a cocked hat.

It happened at the breakfast table. My wife was telling me that little Willy's appetite seemed to be failing lately, and was trying to tempt him with a spoonful of jam, when he leaned back in his high chair, made a wry face and said with a terrible distinctness: "Me don't want no dam!"

My wife was generous. She did not laugh aloud. She did not say: "I told you so." But she was right. The tendency to violate the rules of grammar is born in man, as the tendency to commit sin is born in him.—Youth's Companion.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

WILLIAM'S NATAL DAY

Great Gathering of Royalty in Berlin.

Every German Prince of Note, Except the Regent of Bavaria, Present—The City Gayly Decorated—Receptions and Dinners During Birthday Week.

Berlin, Jan. 28.—Emperor William has made his birthday celebration a great spectacle. Apparently his object has been to dazzle the people and dispel their suspicions of strife between him and the other allied monarchs in Germany. Only on supreme occasions has the city seen such a gathering of crowned heads. The kings of Saxony and Wurtemberg, the grand dukes of Baden, Hesse and Oldenburg, and the dukes of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and Mecklenburg-Schwerin are here. In fact every noteworthy German prince, except the regent of Bavaria, has come to lend pomp to the fetes. With the princes and their suites there have arrived many families of the court nobility who have filled the big hotels and overflowed into the private palaces of high Berlin society.

All the city yesterday had a holiday aspect. Carriages with outriders rolled along the double rows of lindens. The larger business houses put up their shutters early and let their employes out to see the great people from the provincial capitals. Decorations, hastily ordered and executed, transformed the Friedrich strasse, Leipziger strasse and Unter den Linden. Every house and street of pretensions was gay with the flags of all the federal states. The evening brought the finest illumination seen since the old emperor's ninetieth birthday. All the big buildings were ablaze with electric lights arranged in patriotic designs. The finest effects were produced on the large government buildings but the illuminations of the Dresden bank, the Hamburg-American steamship company, Hertzog's bazaar, and the electricity offices were hardly less splendid.

At 8 o'clock in the morning 101 artillery salutes announced the opening of the birthday festivities. Then the massed bands of the garrison regiments marched through Unter den Linden and up to the Lustgarten where they played the reveille. The streets through which they passed were filled with early risers among whom were hundreds of excursionists from near by towns. The emperor began the day by attending religious service after which he, all the allied monarchs, the grinces of their families and their suites went to the arsenal. There the royal visitors and the assembled officers of all the troops stationed near Berlin heard an imperial order to this effect:

With a view to giving the troops a visible sign of the proud memories left to them by the glorious war twenty-five years ago, all military standards and flags, whenever unfolded between July 15, 1895, and May 10, 1896, shall be decorated with fresh oak leaves. Moreover, the first guns of all batteries which took part in the campaign between July 15, 1870 and May 10, 1871, shall be wreathed in oak leaves whenever used or displayed in public during the period already named.

The weather is favorable. There is some snow in the streets but not enough to keep anybody at home. As the day advanced the crowds in the streets increased. The police did not enforce the Sunday closing law and many shops did an enormous business. The emperor was cheered loudly whenever he appeared in public.

Brilliant as all the receptions and dinners during the birthday week will be, they will hardly surpass the Schleppencour which was held in the rittersaal of the Old Castle on Wednesday. The report from court is that the splendor of this reception has not been equalled at any function in William II's reign, or, in other words, at any function since the house of Hohenzollern began to rule. The emperor received standing at the front of the throne dais. He wore the red gala uniform of the Garde du Corpe with all his orders and decorations in glittering rows across his breast. The empress' gown with it enormous train was of a gold-woven material embroidered with silver. She, too, had on all her decorations besides a collar and crown studded with diamonds. A long white veil, fastened under the crown, hung down her back to her train. The ladies of the court yielded little to her in magnificence of costume. The Princess Henry, the emperor's sister-in-law, who stood near the empress, wore a light blue brocade with a train of the same. One step lower was the Princess Frederick Leopola in a white satin gown with a silver embroidered train. Her diadem was of great emeralds and chased gold. The Princess Albert of Prussia wore purple and a diadem of diamonds and large pearls. The Princess Frederick Charles appeared in white satin and a diadem of diamonds.

Princess Frederick of Hohenzollern and Princess Victoria of Schaumburg Lippe stood near the first step of the dais. Like the others they were glittering with diamonds and gemmed orders. The doyenne of the diplomatic corps, Lady Malet, wife of the English ambassador, presented Mrs. Runyon and her daughters to the imperial couple. Among the other Americans who filed past the throne were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jackson, captain and Mrs. Evans, and lieutenant and Mrs. Vreeland, all of the United States embassy.

After the reception and presentations, the members of the United States embassy went to dine with Herr von Kosciol-Koscielski, formerly the leader of the Poles in the reichstag. At his table they met Herr von Wedel, chief of the imperial household, the Austrian and French ambassadors and many high officials of state.

Death of Cartoonist Van Sant.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL.

Leo XIII.'s Address to America Made Public in Rome Yesterday.

London, Jan. 28.—The Standard will print to-day a summary of the pope's encyclical letter to the American bishops. The letter opens with the words Longinqua Oceani Spatia. It recalls the fact that the pope associated himself with the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, the evangelization of which was the first care of Columbus and was realized by the Franciscan and Dominican monks and Jesuit fathers.

After pointing out that the first Catholic bishop in America was a great friend of George Washington, his holiness shows how the Episcopal councils, aided by the breadth of view and equity of American laws, assured the development of Catholic institutions in America. It was to contribute still more to this development that the pope had founded the University of Washington, for it was of importance that Catholics should be in the front rank of education in the sciences—even the modern sciences, provided that they were harmonious with the integrity of the faith.

To this end his holiness exhorts all Catholics to do all in their power to encourage the progress of the University in Washington as well as the North American college in Rome. As regards the apostolic delegation to the church in the United States, the pope says that it was instituted with a view to drawing more closely together the bonds between the Catholics of America and the holy see without in anyway curtailing the powers of the bishops. His holiness urges the American episcopate to put an end to strife and to instil the idea of the unity and perpetuity of marriage among the faithful and to inculcate among the people the civil and religious virtues.

The pope calls upon bishops to turn aside the workingmen's associations from law-breaking and violence. He urges them to teach newspaper men to respect religion and truth and to reprove those journals which pass judgment upon episcopal acts; finally, to turn the Protestants to Catholicism by charity, by instruction in the doctrine of the Catholic church, and by leading exemplary lives.

In conclusion his holiness recommends the sending of missionaries to the Indians.

THE SOUND DISASTER.

More Than Twelve Lives Thought To Have Been Lost.

New London, Conn., Jan. 28.—The tug Sea King is crusing around the locality in which her tow parted on Friday night, and in which five barges were lost in the Sound, looking for bodies and, if possible, to ascertain the whereabouts of the barges.

It is said here that there were more than twelve people on the barges when they went down. The claim is made that a few months ago, when the barge American Eagle was in this port, Capt. Hartsho had his wife and three or four children on board, and that the family made their home on the barge. It is believed that they were on the barge when she was lost.

The first reports said that only the captain, his wife and daughter were on the American Eagle. Reports have reached here that the bodies of a man and woman and quantities of wreckage have been found on Quenocontaug Beach.

FACTORY INSPECTORS' REPORT.

It Is a Bulky Document Containing the Work for the Year.

Albany, Jan. 28.—The ninth annual report of the factory inspector will be submitted to the legislature to-night. It is a bulky document, containing in detail the work of the department during the year, giving the names of the owners of all the manufactories inspected, the number of their employes, the proportionate number of women and children found at work, and the details of all changes ordered, and whether those orders have or have not been complied with.

It states that the total number of inspections during the year was greater by several thousands than in previous years, and there was a consequent increase in the number of changes required and compliances obtained.

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The President Preparing One on the Financial Situation.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The president and Secretary Carlisle spent several hours together at the white house yesterday. Mr. Carlisle brought with him financial data bearing on the depleted treasury gold reserve, and with this as a basis the president began the preparation of a message to congress.

It is understood that it will treat principally of the continued drain of the gold reserve and remedies for stopping it. The message will, it is said, be short and vigorous and be delivered to-day.

After Embezzler Collins.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 28.—Sheriff H. O. Wilson, of Arlington, Vt., is here with requisition papers from Gov. Woodbury for George W. Collins, an Englishman, 45 years of age, who was agent and collector for the Wayne Building and Loan association in Bennington county. He embezzled a large sum money and last July fled to England, deserting his wife and children. A short time ago he returned and was arrested in Philadelphia.

Heavy Verdict Against a Railroad.

Little Rock, Ark., Jan. 28.—The suit of Mrs. Sarah O. Spencer, of California, against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway company for $100,000 damages growing out of a wreck near Texarkana last May, in which she received injuries which made her a paralytic for life, has ended. The jury returned a verdict giving Mrs. Spencer a judgment for $20,000.

College of Agriculture Burned.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 28.—The main building of the Rhode Island College of Agriculture and Mechanics Arts, at Kingston, was burned yesterday, loss $35,000. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Quigley Off for Sing Sing.

New York, Jan. 28.—Broker Quigley left the tombs this morning for Sing Sing to begin his fifteen years and six months sentence.

CONGRESSIONAL WORK

Programme of Both Houses for the Coming Week.

The Hawaiian Affairs Will Possibly Consume the Morning Hour in the Senate While the Bankruptcy Bill Is the Unfinished Business—Sugar Will Occupy the House.

Washington, Jan. 28.—The adoption by the senate by a majority of two votes of Mr. Vest's substitute for Mr. Allen's Hawaiian resolution is but the beginning of a struggle that will probably continue during this week and republicans confidently predict will end in the passage of a resolution condemning the administration for the part it has taken in Hawaiian affairs. Mr. Vest's substitute which now forms the basis of the discussion in the senate, but which has not yet received final affirmative action, will not be permitted to come to a vote for some days. It prevailed Saturday by the aid of two republican votes, Messrs. Powers and Pettigrew. The former, it is said, will not support the resolution when it comes up in the senate for formal disposition. The Vest substitute endorses the policy of non-intervention and the Allen resolution declares for annexation and the stationing of ships of war at Honolulu.

All the populists are in favor of Mr. Allen's resolution which has been temporarily displaced by the Vest substitute and the republicans are said to be of the same mind with the single exception of Mr. Pettigrew. There will be two accessions to the republican vote before the week is over in the persons of Mr. Mantle, elected to fill the Montana vacancy, and Mr. Clark, to fill the Wyoming vacancy. Mr. Mantle is expected to reach Washington early in the week and Mr. Clark is on his way here. This will give the opponents of Mr. Vest's substitute the majority vote and will enable them to pass such a resolution as they may desire. The republicans declare that they will not permit any final vote to be taken until they have their full strength in the senate and will consume the morning hour each day on the Hawaiian matter. Mr. Teller, in line with this policy, will continue his speech to-day and will probably be followed by other republicans until such time as they see fit to allow the vote to be taken.

The bankruptcy bill is now the unfinished business in the senate, Mr. George having called it up Saturday afternoon, although he will give way to-day for a sufficient time to allow Mr. Walcott to secure a vote on the bill to provide for the removal of the southern Ute Indians. Mr. George will not have any opposition in the conduct of his bill at the outset, but there are indications that he may not be so successful later on. There are one or two resolutions relating to elections in certain states that the populists are anxious to have passed and it is not improbable that the republicans may unite with them and call these resolutions up to the discomfiture of Mr. George and the bankruptcy bill. Under the most favorable circumstances the bankruptcy bill can hardly get through the senate under ten days.

Mr. Cockrell expects to report three appropriation bills to the senate this week. The postoffice, the diplomatic, and consular and the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

There is a general understanding that the bankruptcy bill will be temporarily laid aside whenever Mr. Cockrell sees fit to call up an appropriation bill. Mr. Cockrell believes he will get two of these measures out of the way this week.

The house of representatives will begin the week's business to-day under some uncertainty of the order in which it will be prosecuted. Although the consideration of the bill repealing the differential duty on sugar imported from countries paying an export bounty upon that article was begun Saturday and is a privileged matter, no certain assurance can be given as to when its consideration will be concluded. Mr. Wilson has said that he would not at present ask for a rule to close debate, and members of the committee on rules have not been advised by him as to his wishes in this matter. To-day will be open for a continuance of the discussion, but judging from the manner in which it started Saturday, one day will by no means afford sufficient time for all who wish to speak to be heard.

The committee on rules agreed to give the Pacific railroad committee to-morrow and Wednesday for the consideration of the funding bill, but it is intimated that if Mr. Wilson insists on keeping the sugar duty bill before the house until disposed of, the Pacific railroad bill will be postponed. The committee on naval affairs have given notice that their appropriation bill will be called up Friday.

Should the Pacific railroad bill get the floor it will be the first time with one exception in seventeen years that a bill directly affecting the Union and Central and Pacific Railway companies has come before the house.

The Hazle Mine Fire.

Hazleton, Pa., Jan. 28.—The real work of fighting the fire in the Hazle mine began last night when six streams of water were turned on the flames. As yet the water has had little perceptible effect, and the situation is unchanged. Nevertheless, the Lehigh Valley officials believe they will be able to confine the fire to its present location and will not be compelled to flood the entire mine to subdue it.

The Fourth Victim Recovered.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 28.—The fourth body from the schooner Londer, wrecked at Norman's Woe, has been recovered in a badly mutilated condition. The funeral of the four victims will occur to-day from the Portuguese church.

A STATESMAN.

He was a dashing young Congressman, who came to Washington on the tidal wave from one of the districts in the South. But he had not been at the Capitol more than six months before those who had known him at home and came here on business, scarcely recognized him as the same man. A great change had come over Mr. Algernone Smith Brownlee, M. C. At home he had never amounted to much socially. He came of very poor parents—"white trash" the colored verdict said—though his relations had never been indicted by the Grand Jury. Mr. Brownlee's pedigree, however, began with Mr. Brownlee, and what he lacked in pedigree he made up by his prodigious hustling abilities.

With his keen energy and hustling tendency of mind, he had the good fortune to combine an affable disposition, an accommodating manner, a pleasant smile and a certain good address. When he entered the race for Congress none imagined for a minute that he had the slightest prospect of success, but the average political weather prophet has a very dangerous tendency to pin his faith to the infallibility of his own opinions and stand pat upon them; and that is why it happens so often that young men like Mr. Brownlee beat out an old race horse and go to Congress on a tidal wave. Unlike the ravens who croaked his doom, Brownlee did some characteristic hustling, snatched the nomination from a tired old campaigner and was elected.

When he reached Washington he wore the conventional soft black felt hat and long black skirt coat—a Southern idea of a Prince Albert. But before he had been here six months he looked like a copy of the latest edition of one of Jim Bell's Broadway swells, with a silk hat, black cutaway coat and gray trousers. And that's why his constituents scarcely recognized him.

It's strange how these things happen in Washington. The rich and thoroughbred Miss Daisy Vernon, who had smiled with icy scorn upon the suits of a dozen society people casting themselves at her feet, together with their fortunes and pedigrees, felt her heart dissolve beneath the insidious attention of Mr. Brownlee, M. C. There may have been something in that M. C., a mistaken idea, perhaps, that a man who is sent to Congress must be the cock of the walk in his district—an idea that some persons have—and that, altogether, the suit of a member of the House who combined as many attractive qualities as her Brownlee was preferable to that of any other mortal.

And so, to cut things short, after a dashing courtship, they were married at one of the fashionable churches, with a great display of pomp, the attendance of her distinguished relatives and his Congressional friends, members of the press, etc. Then, after a brilliant reception, they departed on their bridal trip, but not to Brownlee's home. On the contrary, he purchased tickets over a railroad that took him in a diametrically opposite direction, just as far from his district as he could go.

On the whole Brownlee deserved success. He had no influential friends to thank for his rise in the world; no family influence had stood back of him to direct his efforts; no money had been used to buy him a seat in Congress. He had just invested what mother wit nature had endowed him with, in such opportunities as came to hand, and when fortune, in her timid way, had knocked at his door, as she is said to do at every man's door once in a lifetime, he had said "Come in!" in his loudest tones.

* * * * * * *

The session came to an end. The election was near at hand, and every member hastened home to look after his fences. It was the hardest struggle of his life to decide upon a course of action with regard to his aristocratic wife. Take her home? Leave her here? He suggested the latter course.

"I have been thinking a good deal about it," remarked Mrs. Brownlee. "I think I shall accompany you. You know, dear, I have never seen your papa and mamma. I have formed my own ideas of them, and am real anxious to see them. They must be just charming people to have a son like my Ally."

"Well, I'm not ashamed of 'em, anyhow," he replied in desperation.

They packed their things and left town the next evening.

If Mrs. Brownlee, in her buoyant trustfulness, anticipated scenes of greeting in which mingled the picturesque effects of a summer residence on the banks of Lake Como, as described by Claude Melnotte, with the other details of romantic stage illusions, which beguile the senses of a girl who has seen only the fashionable side of life, her anticipations were somewhat dampened when they stepped off the train in the dark and found themselves on a platform where some rough looking men were lounging about under the canopy of a projecting roof that was sheltering them from a dreary rainfall.

"Dog my oats, Bill!" called out one, "if this ain't Smith Brownlee. Hello, Smith; got back, have yo'?" slapping him on the back. "My, but yo' look putty! Come 'ere, Jim, look at 'im. Would ye know 'im ef yo' met 'im on a dark road? Say, Smith, yo' must a-struck it rich when we sent yo' to Congress? When yo' left yar yo' didn't have an overcoat to yo' back, an' I'll leave it to the crowd, now, did 'ee?"

Smith tried to take it as a joke. He laughed softly and introduced his wife in the ill-lighted waiting room whither the delegation of his constituents had followed.

They removed their hats and stared at the lady like a lot of bumpkins; but this diversion continued only until the most loud spoken constituent could think of saying something that was intended for a compliment to Mrs. Brownlee, but which ricochetted upon her husband in the form of another rude sally at the metamorphosis of his condition, when they all hawhawed in chorus.

Mrs. Brownlee was beginning to get shocked. The smell of the coal oil made her ill, and she pinched her husband's arm as a signal to break away and to hie to the bosom of his family.

Brownlee told the 'bus driver to stop at the hotel. He did; but the owner was tearing down that part of the building where the rooms for guests were located, to rebuild, he said, "again court time," and there was no place there for them. So there was nothing to do but what Brownlee, in the most desperate calculation of his chances, had never contemplated even as a last resort—stop at his home.

"Daisy," said he, in a hoarse voice as the 'bus splashed through the mire of the road; "Daisy"—softly taking her hand in his—"are you prepared to make a sacrifice for me; greater, I hope, than any I shall ever ask you to make for me again in all our lives?"

She said "yes," warily, with her head swaying loosely on her shoulders like a sick child's; "what do you ask me?"

"That you will not hate and despise me when I introduce you to my father and mother," he said, tenderly.

"They are poor, then?" she asked in that same weary tone.

"They are the commonest people in the State; they are so common that when everybody in town had the cholera it passed them by as not worth noticing."

"My!" she exclaimed, "how did you ever get into Congress?"

"By my own efforts, and not with the help of anybody in the world. I just simply hustled for it."

"Well," she said, "let it come."

Brownlee's mother smoked a corncob pipe and had whiskers. Brownlee's father ate his supper in his shirt sleeves, and wore cowhide boots outside of his pants while he was eating it. The wonder is that he didn't go to bed with them. The furniture was scant, and they rented the house; that is, they rented it, but Brownlee, M. C., paid the rent.

The greeting that the Brownlees, first edition, extended to the Brownlees, second edition, was cordial to demonstrativeness. The maternal Brownlee was something of a cook, and soon had a repast steaming on the table.

The room had no comforts except a patched carpet, a pine bedstead and an upright packing box with a curtain drawn around it for a washstand and a portable mirror of the species often seen at cheap auction stores.

And this was what her Lake Como illusion had shrunk to!

When she arose the next morning her headache had not abated. The smell of fried pork and coffee that struck her olfactories while she was dressing was too much for her delicate nerves, and she never wished herself farther away from the house of her husband's parents than at that moment. She sipped a little coffee and then withdrew again to her room, just to be alone. When Brownlee, M. C., entered, she was lying on the bed fully dressed, weeping.

What passed between them in the interview that took place is a matter of conjecture. The result became evident when the 'bus drove up to the Brownlee mansion that evening, and Mr. and Mrs Brownlee, the younger, got in and rode to the depot. Brownlee saw his wife safely aboard the Pullman car, and then stood on the platform and watched the train disappear in the distance.

But that did not deter Brownlee from getting out and hustling. If he had worked like a Trojan the first time for his nomination, he threw the energy of a double dose of Trojan devotion into his efforts now. All the voters in the district did not know what the loafers at the station knew and what Brownlee himself knew, that he came of the commonest stock of white blood in the State. They perhaps didn't care. Brownlee had been a good member, and he could talk like a threshing machine, and his genial manners carried the day, and the result of it all was that he was renominated and elected, and went back to Washington to finish his unexpired term of service in the House.

His wife sat in the gallery one day unseen by him when a great debate was on. Brownlee had prepared himself for the master effort of his life. He had got the consent of the leaders on his side to make a speech. He attracted little attention as he arose, and with his genial smile glanced over the House, drew a deep breath and launched forth. But by and by he warmed to his subject, and here and there a member on the other side interrupted him. Then suddenly Brownlee's genius flashed forth in all its originality. Several members who had tried to trip him up found themselves mercilessly impaled upon the fiery shafts of Brownlee's sharp retorts and held up to the ridicule of the House, while Brownlee smiled in that fetching way of his that made him resemble an expert conjurer when he contemplates the astonishment of the deluded victims of his craftiness.

Before he sat down Brownlee had scored a triumph that insured him a place on one of the big committees in the House when the next Congress should organize.

One of the doorkeepers handed him a note. He was receiving the congratulations of his side of the House, and he did not open it for several minutes, holding it almost forgotten in his closed hand. When he opened it he read:

"DEAR ALLY—I am ready to beg your pardon now—any time. Come. Am heartbroken. "DAISY."

The Polite Boston Girl.

A very fashionable young man had just come out into the wind from the shelter of the buildings, when the gale took his hat and whirled it off down the street towards Copley Square at a terrible rate.

The young man looked helplessly after it. In the midst of its flight it chanced to pass near a very pretty girl on the sidewalk. She made a run for it, caught it, and actually started a little towards the young man with it; and as he presently came running up she took out her handkerchief, dusted the hat and handed it to the young man with a bow. He was actually too much dumfounded by the proceeding to utter a word of thanks. He merely took the hat and thrust it foolishly on his head, while the young lady, with a faint smile on her pretty face, walked away. And there was not a single bystander, even in that conservative neighborhood, who seemed in the least shocked, or indeed other than pleased.—Boston Transcript.

A Fat Woman's Dilemma.

"Pardon me, young man," she said; "can you tell me what the next station is?"

"Haverford, ma'am."

"Well, young man when we get there will you help me off the train?"

"I wouldn't ask your assistance, young man, but I tried to get off two stations back and couldn't. You see I am so stout that I have to get down the platform steps backward. The conductor saw me unfortunately, and thinking from my position I was just boarding the train, helped me on again."—Philadelphia Record.

A TWO ACRE FARM.

On Which a Man Supports a Family of Five.

On the narrow strip of land lying between the river and the track of the Western New York and Pennsylvania Railroad, at the northern extremity of Eldred, Pa., is to be found the banner farm of McKean county. Here, in a neat little cottage, lives F. Segling, wife and five children—three boys and two girls—all of whom derive their means of livelihood from their two acre farm. Queer, is it not, when we hear so much of inability to make a living for smaller families on much larger farms?

The gentleman purchased the land and built the cottage while working as a carpenter. Three years ago his physical condition necessitated a change of occupation. Then, with that faith in mother earth which we believe is more fully developed in the better class of Germans than any other people, he turned to his farm and promptly decided that, on a plantation of the size, quality, not quantity, must be the maxim, and that in no other line could he reach his ideal so nearly as in the cultivation of celery.

Spurred by his necessities and supported by any amount of quiet determination, he proceeded on this theory. From the beginning his success has been flattering, and to-day he stands ready to market 30,000 stalks of celery, one third blanched and two thirds of the self-blanching varieties.

Mr. Segling finds work the year round, and nine tenths of his time is spent on half an acre, for although the farm comprises two acres, but one fourth of it is in celery, the remainder being garden and meadow.

Upon this half acre there has been deposited this year 150 one-horse loads of manure. You will observe that in three particulars—i. e., the amount of work, the quantity of manure and the value of the crop—it compares favorably with most farms. Mr. Segling says the last two years have been disastrous to celery, this year especially so, on account of the drought.

To offset this he has purchased a fifteen horse power boiler and a steam pump, and as a creater of rain storms he can give the Government experts in this line cards and spades and then drown them.

He has the entire Alleghany River at his command, and it is a clear case of disaster to drouth on this farm. In answer to further questions Mr. Segling said that, while he was not getting rich, he was making a living for himself and family and was independent. Think of independence for a family of seven, maintained on two acres!

Mose Will Read His Title Clear.

There is a promising candidate for future greatness down in Broome street, New York City.

Little Mose Meyer had felt for some time that the duty of providing for the family rested upon himself. A few days ago he chanced to see a man put the sign "Boy Wanted" in front of his store. Mose immediately walked in and applied for the position. The groceryman looked critically at the little chap, in seedy clothes, and growled out:

"Humph! You won't do; you're too small."

Mose reflected that Kosher diet was getting mighty scarce at their house and remembered that he had an older brother who would just about suit. But there were dozens of boys who would swarm in, and the place would be filled before he could go home and bring back his brother. This catastrophe must be averted at all hazards. As he left the store he quickly hid the sign behind some barrels and "spud" home. In a few minutes he came back, breathless but triumphant, dragging his brother Solomon. No objection was made to the size of the latter, and he was engaged at $3 a week. The first task given him was to "take down the sign," which made little Mose smile. He also smiles broadly, time and again, as he feasts on goose and onion, and thinks how he won the victory for the Meyer family.

Refusing a Big Fee.

A very eminent physician had cured a little child from a very dangerous illness. The thankful mother turned her steps toward the house of her son's saviour.

"Doctor," she said, "there are some services which cannot be repaid. I did not know how to express my gratitude. I thought you would, perhaps, be so kind as to accept this purse, embroidered by my own hands."

"Madam," replied the doctor, roughly, "medicine is no trivial affair, and our visits are only to be rewarded in money. Small presents serve to sustain friendship, but they do not maintain our families."

"But, doctor," said the lady alarmed and wounded, "speak; tell me your fee."

"Two thousand francs, madam."

The lady opens the purse, takes out five bank notes of one thousand francs each, gives two to the doctor, puts the remaining three back in her purse, bows coldly and departs.—The Amusing Journal.

Solomon's Temple Was No Great Shucks.

"These stories about the beauty of the temple at Jerusalem must be taken with a grain of salt," said Dr. Solomon Schindler in Steinert Hall recently. "We must remember that at no time was there more than 50,000 or 60,000 people in Jerusalem, and that they lived in small, low roofed huts and had narrow streets, and that their surroundings were anything but beautiful. The temple was not larger than Mechanics' Hall nor more beautiful than the Park Street station, but to people who had such surroundings as the Jews at that time such buildings would be things of great beauty by comparison. We must judge all things by comparison."—Boston Herald.

CHAPTER I.

THE RETURN OF THE TRANSGRESSOR.

The telegraph operator came out of his office with a sealed envelope in his hand. He had just received a message, and that didn't happen every day, in Williston. The event was of sufficient importance to be noted by the men who were standing on Capt. Henry Thompson's steps. Capt. Thompson was the village undertaker, and his shop was directly opposite the telegraph office. There was languid expression of baseless speculation regarding the telegram, and it developed into active interest when the operator began to walk across the street staight toward the little group.

He gave the telegram to Samuel Ames, one of the old residents of the town, a man much respected for his excellent qualities, and pitied for his misfortunes which had been many. Mr. Ames took the message with a hand that trembled a little. He looked carefully at the envelope, and then anxiously at the man who had given it to him. The telegrapher averted his eyes. This pantomime, which would have been incomprehensible to a stranger, meant much to those who saw it. News in Williston is mostly bad news. The town is so far out of the way that good news, traveling much slower than the other kind, rarely reaches it in time. A telegram is a thing to be afraid of. Williston women, who had sons in the city, had been known to faint at the sight of such an envelope as that which Samuel Ames held. Therefore the old telegraphers had formed the habit of writing "good news" in big letters over the address when the contents was not very distressing. Those words were what Mr. Ames' eyes had sought and had not found.

"Perhaps it is all for the best," said the telegrapher. "It's about Ned."

Mr. Ames tore the envelope open, and laboriously read its contents. Then he looked straight ahead of him for thirty seconds; and perhaps he saw the weather-beaten building on the other side of the street, but more likely it was a little boy's face that grew, and changed, and vanished.

"Ned's coming home," he said, handing the telegram to Capt. Thompson. "You'll do what's necessary, Henry. I must go and break the news to mother."

Capt. Thompson bowed gravely. Not a word more was spoken, but two of the men quietly took their places beside Mr. Ames, and walked with him up the street toward his house.

"HE SAW NED AMES ALIVE."

When the three were beyond hearing, the telegrapher said:

"Ned Ames is coming home at last, and he couldn't do better than come as he does."

There was no dissenting voice. It was the opinion of all present that Ned Ames was better dead than alive.

It must be admitted that the young man had done much to justify this condemnation. His boyhood had been diligently employed in getting out of one scape into another. At twenty he was a drunkard; a year later he narrowly escaped the penitentiary. Then he fled from the town, and for five years, up to the time when this story opens, his whereabouts had been unknown in Williston. Rumor had located him in a dozen prisons, and had accused him of every crime in the calendar. No one hoped to hear any good of him except his mother, a woman beautiful in spirit whose children should have been incapable of evil.

"Just what did the telegram say, Henry?" asked one of those who had witnessed the scene which has been described.

"He died in Boston, of diphtheria," respouded the undertaker. "His brother Frank was with him at the last."

"How'd Frank find him?"

"The telegram doesn't say. The body will be here on the boat to-morrow. Frank is coming with it."

Frank Ames was Ned's elder brother. He lived in Boston, and was so prosperous that it was even reported that he had sent money home. Certainly he spent it lavishly when he visited Williston in the summer. His parents were proud of him, but they loved Ned's degraded memory better than the living presence of the other. Thus you may know true love; that it is thrown away.

Ned's funeral was very impressive. There were a hundred reasons why it must be so. First, there was the mystery which had surrounded the young man. Would any record of his five years' wandering come to light beside his coffin? Then there was great curiosity to hear what the minister, Rev. Eliot Warren, would say. To speak at the funeral of such a man as Ned Ames is always difficult. If good alone could be spoken of the dead there would not be much to say in this case. But beyond these mere generalities was a special difficulty far deeper, far more painful. Ned Ames' name had been connected with a sorrow which had broken Eliot Warren's heart and had made his hair as white as snow in the early autumn of his life.

That was the other Williston mystery. What had become of Ned Ames? What had become of Charlotte Warren? One of those questions had been answered, at least, in part. Nobody expected an answer to the other. There was never a disappearance more complete than Charlotte Warren's. A pretty girl who "didn't mean any harm," who "would have been quiet enough if her mother had lived to look after her;" those were the comments which Charlotte's conduct had excited during her last few years at home. And so kindly was the feeling behind the words, that when the secret came out, when the girl's absence from home could no longer be explained by any supposition that did not blast her name, there was no one who had the heart to claim a prophecy fulfilled.

Gossip had wearied itself with that mystery. The girl was not dead. She had written to her father, and had begged him to forget her. He had exhausted his resources in the endeavor to find her, and had failed. Upon whom should the blame fall? At first there was mention of young Dr. Robert Maxwell. He had seemed to be smitten with the girl, and had left town rather suddenly about the time of her disappearance. But he had returned, and had cleared himself of suspicion. His temporary absence had been easily explained. Though Charlotte had left behind her what might be called a confession, it was so vague as to leave even the sin itself in doubt. There were some of the townspeople who stoutly maintained that the girl had run away to go upon the stage. But when all the evidence had been discussed a thousand times, Williston rendered a verdict that Ned Ames knew something about it. Charlotte had smiled upon him in spite of his disgrace; and her disappearance succeeded his flight by less than two months.

In view of these facts, an address by Rev. Eliot Warren beside the coffin of Ned Ames should be worth hearing. Would his plea for the forgiveness of the sinner ring hollow and false? Would he dare to openly condemn, when he knew that everyone within sound of his voice would be thinking of his daughter?

The Ames house was crowded, though it was so large as to hold nearly half the population of the town. The choirs of the orthodox and Unitarian churches, united for this most exceptional occasion, were stationed in the hall. Mr. Warren had not come. A whisper ran about that he had been unable, at the last moment, to make up his mind to it. This most interesting rumor was set at rest presently by the news that he was coming through the yard. With him were his younger daughter, Anna, and Dr. Maxwell. The recent announcement of the engagement of these two had been received in such a way as to prove that the old suspicions really had been laid at rest.

Samuel Ames stopped Dr. Maxwell in the hall, while the pastor, with his daughter, entered the parlor.

"Mother hopes you've thought better about that," said the old man, speaking of his wife by the usual endearing term. "I hope you'll let her see him, if you think he—he wouldn't be too much changed."

His tone was indescribably pathetic, conveying another sorrow than his own. His eyes had that peculiar appearance of excessive dryness noticeable in New England people when they mourn, as if the race had seen so much trouble that generations long since gone, where there is no such thing, had used up all its stock of tears.

"I can't permit it," said the young doctor, firmly. "You must think of the great danger it would involve. Although the coffin is metal-lined, I advised you against a public funeral. I'm sorry to grieve Mrs. Ames, but you know I told her all about this yesterday morning when your son's body was brought here."

"Couldn't it be done at the cemetery where there'll be only us?" pleaded the old man. "We don't care about the risk at our age."

"Don't permit Mrs. Ames to go to the cemetery," rejoined Dr. Maxwell, earnestly. "It's as much as her life is worth on such a day as this. There's a terrible wind, and the light snow is blowing in clouds. She must not—"

"But she will," responded Ames. "I can't prevent her. She will stand by her son's grave to-day. It is useless to protest. Hush! The service is about to begin."

The voice of the pastor was heard, and all other sounds ceased.

"We commend to Thee, O Lord, the body of Thy servant, that, being dead unto the world, he may live unto Thee; and whatsoever sin he may have committed through the frailty of his mortal nature, do Thou in Thy merciful loving kindness blot out forever."

His voice trembled with the fervency of his supplication. It was a prayer for the forgiveness of sin; and it was followed by an address which proved to every one who heard it that the spirit of perfect forgiveness had descended from on high to dwell in the heart of the speaker.

If there had been no more to mark the day, surely the words of that good man would have made it memorable in Williston. There was music—which had been the only influence that had ever seemed to turn Ned Ames' soul toward higher purposes—and the best promises of Scripture; a last prayer, and then the coffin was borne out to the hearse. Mrs. Ames followed it, leaning upon her husband's arm and her son's. Frank Ames—a tall, dark and rather handsome man, with a deeply furrowed brow—seemed to be much moved. Indeed, he showed more grief than either of his parents.

Few followed the hearse to the cemetery. It was a bitter day. Dr. Maxwell openly advised that only those men should go whose presence was absolutely necessary. As he was not one of these, he emphasized his own advice by refraining from the ordeal. He insisted upon taking Anna Warren to her home, and he exhausted much persuasion upon her father, who was obdurate and would brave the weather.

The grave had been dug through the soil which the cold had turned to stone. Into this "narrow house" the coffin was lowered, though Mrs. Ames had fallen upon her knees at the snow to beg for a last look in her son's face. Samuel Ames would have yielded, violating a direct promise which he had given to Dr. Maxwell, but Frank, though terribly excited by this painful scene, preserved his coolness sufficiently to control the course of events, until a new and surprising influence changed all.

A stranger had been observed among the little party in the cemetery. He was a man of middle age, plainly dressed, and he seemed to know no one except a boy named Horace Riddle, with whom he stood apart. The boy came of one of the poorest families in the town and was known as a ne'er-do-well, which facts made his companion of less interest. No one gave him more than a passing glance.

But just as the coffin touched the bottom of the grave this man stepped forward.

"I, sincerely ask your pardon," he said, "for interfering in a matter with which I have no right to concern myself; but if it is at all practicable, I would advise doing as this good lady requests."

There was that in his tone which excited a dreadful curiosity. It was so evident that he held something in reserve.

"Why?" cried a half dozen men at once.

"Because," said the stranger, "this boy informs me that he saw Edward Ames alive in this town yesterday."

The boy instantly spoke up and confirmed this extraordinary statement.

It is needless to describe the consternation which these words caused. Men lost control of themselves. The coffin was rudely dragged out of the grave. Rev. Mr. Warren and Frank Ames pleaded in vain for reasonable investigation. Everybody else counseled the immediate opening of the coffin. And the strangest part of the whole situation was that Horace Riddle's word was not worth a penny in the town. If he had told his story without the backing of this mysterious stranger, nobody would have listened.

Seeing that nothing could be done to quell this excitement, and that Mrs. Ames' agitation was rapidly approaching the point where human nature would endure no more, the pastor gave his sanction to the opening of the coffin, he himself assisting.

The outer wooden lid was easily removed. There was a loud cry from those who were bending over the coffin. The metal sheath was revealed, and a glance showed that it had been cut and wrenched.

"We shall find no body here!" cried one of the men.

At the same moment three others lifted the metal lid which was scarcely fastened at all.

"Yes! There's a body here. He's here, poor fellow!" exclaimed he who had spoken before.

The body was covered with an ordinary white sheet. It was gently withdrawn, revealing the face of one who, through the frailty of her mortal nature, had transgressed, but had come home at last—the face of Charlotte Warren.

AT REST.

Mrs. Medora Easton Bartlett.

The funeral services of Medora Cibley Easton, age 72, widow of the late Abner Bartlett, Sr., of New York, daughter of Rufus Easton of St. Charles, Mo., and mother of Abner Bartlett, Jr., of Plainfield, were held Saturday, Jan. 26, at 7 p. m., from the private residence of George C. Boldt, 3 West Thirty-third street, New York, adjoining the Hotel Waldorf, of which he is the proprietor.

The floral decorations were especially beautiful. The sidewalls and ceilings of the parlors were hidden beneath large palms, ferns and cut flowers. The set pieces were numerous. The royal purple velvet casket, with solid silver mountings, was similar to the caskets used at the obsequies of the late John and William Astor and also at the funeral of decedent's late husband, who was manager and confidential adviser of the Astor estates for the past 30 years.

Mr. and Mrs. Abner Bartlett were regarded by Mr. and Mrs. Boldt as their adopted parents, and after the death of Mr. Bartlett, his widow became a guest of the Hotel Waldorf, where she occupied a suite of rooms, and died last Wednesday morning, after a lingering illness.

She was born in St. Charles, Mo. Her simple, Christian, and unostentatious life endeared her to a large circle of relatives and friends. She was devoted to charity, and to gentle kindly deeds among the poor. Four children survive her: Grace, wife of Dr. Samuel Stryker, the eminent physician of Philadelphia; Mary Cibley, wife of J. West Horner, private secretary of John Astor; Cornelia Burrows, wife of Jonas B. Kissam, retired builder of New York, and Abner Bartlett, Jr., of this city.

The interment took place Sunday morning at 11, in Greenwood Cemetery.

What to Do with Jesus.

The second week of evangelistic services in Grace M. E. Church begins well. Sunday night the house was comfortably filled. Last night the weather kept many at home, but a good company was present to enjoy a sermon by the pastor, Mr. Randolph, who spoke impressively of the importance of deciding what to do with Jesus. He told this story of Robert F. Ingersoll: A one-legged soldier was observed in Washington crossing Pennsylvania avenue when the street was slippery with ice. Just as he was about to step across the gutter to the sidewalk, a man knocked his crutch from under his arm and the poor fellow fell into the gutter. Mr. McLean of Philadelphia told Mr. Ingersoll of it, who expressed great indignation and said the scoundrel ought to be arrested. "And yet"—said his friend—"that is just what you are trying to do, Mr. Ingersoll, to your fellow-men. You are trying to take Christ, their only support, away from them."

The meetings will continue every night this week except Saturday.

That Wicked Brother.

(From The Westfield Standard.)

To the Plainfield Press. Gentlemen—You are as wrong as the Irishman who mistook the parrot for a Jew duck. Here is what you say:—

In order to wean the Westfield Standard from Populism, Editor McBride of the Elizabeth Journal today installed Editor Pearsall as his assistant in the office of Private Secretary to Speaker Cross. All the bright Republican editors have now been rewarded by an appreciative Legislative.

Here are the facts:—Not A. E. but E. R. Pearsall, the wicked brother of the Standard's editor, has been installed as the Assistant Private Secretary to Speaker Cross, an entirely unnecessary office, by the way; and only a small chip of the great block of shameful extravagance which the Republican Legislature puts on the backs of the people these hard times. The Editor of the Standard could n't be elected Assistant Private Secretary to the Pound master. However, we manage to stub along and get out the paper with the assistance of the people.

One application will relieve the pain and suffering and its continued use insures an effectual cure. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

P. FINN QUOTES HISTORY.

REPUDIATES "AMERICAN'S" STATEMENTS CONCERNING CATHOLICS.

Says The Sun Disowned Those Desertion Statistics—Emphasizes the Loyalty of Irishmen to the American Flag.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: In reading "American's" late reply to my communication of Jan. 24, I was indeed surprised to note the historical inaccuracies of the same; also the old and worn-out calumnies which have appeared in all the previous communications from his pen. I will now comply with "American's" request, and quote documentary evidence. As to the Pope's recognition of the Confederacy, let us hear what Judah P. Benjamin, Secretary of State in President Davis's cabinet, said in his letter under date of Feb. 1, 1864, to his diplomatic agent at Rome, Dudley Mann: "The phrase, President of the Confederate States, is a formula of politeness to his correspondent not a political recognition of the fact. None of our political journals treat the letter as a recognition in the sense you attach to it." This incident is fully discussed by John Bigelow, ex-Minister of the United States to France, in the North American Review for October, 1893: "Mr. Bigelow sees no more reason why the Pope's civility in addressing Davis as president, etc., should be construed as a recognition of the Southern Confederacy than his addressing the Anglican Arch-Bishop of Canterbury by that gentleman's official title, would recognize the established Church of England." "American" quotes Lincoln's assassin as being a Romanist, which is utterly false and misleading. Booth was the assassin of Lincoln, and he was not a Catholic. Chiniquy's testimony with the regard to the same has no more weight than the "American's", as Chiniquy was an ex-priest, being deposed Sept. 28, 1851, for immorality. "American" produces his testimony from a Judas or Benedict Arnold. We are all aware of the value of such testimony. "American" asks who fired the first shot (C. Lossing). The first shot was fired by insurgents in Charleston Harbor on a national vessel, having aboard supplies for the garrison of Fort Sumpter. However, it is worthy of record that a New York policeman, Peter Hart, a Catholic serving under Major Anderson in Fort Sumpter, saved the American flag in that first battle of the war. In the thickest of the fight the flag was shot down. The brave and faithful Hart volunteered to raise it again. He climbed a temporary flagstaff, which had been erected, and in the face of a tempest of shot and shell he fastened the tattered banner at its top, where it remained until it was taken down by the commander at the evacuation of the fort. With regard to the desertion question, "American" quotes the New York Sun as being authority for the statement that 72 per cent. of the Irish soldiers deserted from the Union Army during the civil war. The Sun replies: "The Sun did n't say so. The Sun of August 30, 1891, produced a table sent by a correspondent, which said that 72 per cent. of the desertions were of Irishmen, but the figures are wholly false." Enough said for The Sun. As to the course of Christian Doctrine said by "American" to be taught in the parochial schools and Catholic church, the questions and answers in catechetical form have never been taught by the Catholic church, nor in parochial schools. The garbled quotations are not in their original form, and in the sense quoted by "American" certainly appear ludicrous. The extracts quoted by "American" were written in the Latin language. To prove his point he should quote the Latin, and if able translate the same. "American" is certainly very deficient in historical knowledge, or he would not quote the "Council of Lateran" as he did. He says every heretic and Protestant is condemned to death, and every oath of allegience to a government which is Protestant or heretic is abrogated, (Council of Lateran held, A. D., 1215). Now the word Protestants as applied to those outside the Catholic church was not used until the year 1592, when, on April 19, the Lutherans protested against the maintaining of the Edict of Werms. "American" asserts that the authors which he has quoted are the text-books in Catholic theological colleges. This is false. The following are the text-books used in the theological colleges in the United States: "Gury" and Kenning's "Sabtti". "American" rises to the height of supreme absurdity when he quotes "Pope St. Agatho" as addressing an encyclical to the bishops and clergy in the United States. Now "Pope St. Agatho" was head of the church from the years 676 to 678, eight hundred years before America was discovered. Alas, when you depend on your enemies for information, it shows that you have no foundation for your statements in the past. You speak of infallibility, but your knowledge of the doctrine is as limited as the ordinary day laborer's is of geometry.

And now, "American", a word before parting. No honest man in this free land is compelled to hide himself behind a mask. Truth and justice can stand the scrutiny of all eyes. You call yourself an "American", but you have not the spirit of one. The American spirit is a tolerant one, and it loves fair play, and because of those characteristics is admired by all the nations of the civilized world. You attempted to revive old calumnies, and foment the spirit of hatred in this peaceable community, and you did not succeed. As a logician you are an utter failure. As an historian, you have proved to the reading public that you are unworthy of the name; and as one versed in theological lore, you are beneath notice. The shepherd of a flock should be such that the people can rely on what he expounds, but when the leader is blind, alas, all will fall into the ditch. Christ is the Prince of peace, and His true followers will try to walk in His footsteps. The evil spirit is called the prince of darkness, because his works cannot stand the light of day, and his laborers walk in his footsteps. The doctrines you have quoted are not of the Catholic church, but of an imaginary one. When you wish to know the truth, go to approved sources, read approved books, and bear in mind to speak of others as you would have others speak of you. Then you can truthfully term yourself an American, and I shall then consider what you say. Otherwise I will not, as your arguments are not worth the paper they are written on. "Facts count", and the facts given here are indisputable. My assertions in the past as being familiar with documentary evidence are substantiated in this communication, as I have answered all questions accurately. It will be my last. I will now close, advising "American" to take a course in history. It will then be unnecessary for the so-called "Little Paddy Finn" to quote for him historical facts.

An American, P. J. FINN.

[The Press is glad Mr. Finn is through, and hopes American also will stop. The discussion has already occupied much space.—Ed.]

NORTH PLAINFIELD SCHOOL NOTES.

The Senior class held special Lowell exercises Friday afternoon. Miss Lillian Pope commenced with a sketch of Lowell's life. Edward M. Honeyman recited a selection from "The Vision of Sir Launfal," "A Day in June." Miss Florence Smalley followed with another selection from the same poem, "What Earth Gives Us." "The Courtin" was next recited by Miss Adele Woo'ston. The exercises were concluded with a recitation "The First Snowfall," by Miss Maud French. An exercise of a similar nature was held in the primary department at the same time.

The Junior class is preparing for a reception to be given to their teacher, Miss Petrie, on her return some time next month.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

A PLAINFIELD PASTOR WELCOMED.

(From The New Brunswick Home News.)

The congregations at the Livingston Avenue Baptist Church, at both services Sunday, were well repaid for their attendance with two brilliant sermons by Rev. J. W. Richardson, pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, of Plainfield. Both the morning and evening services were well attended, there being quite a number present from other churches.

In the morning Mr. Richardson took his text from 2d Tim., 2:19, "Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal: The Lord knoweth them that are His. And let everyone that name the name of Christ depart from iniquity." The sermon was a most profound one.

In the evening he preached from Daniel 6:10. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks, before his God, as he did aforetime." In the development of this text he brought out the beautiful character of Daniel, his loyalty to his God, his moral courage and his integrity of purpose. His word pictures were most beautiful and graphic and his audience gave him their most earnest attention during the entire sermon.

Mr. Richardson is a most earnest and forceful speaker and very much of an orator. He speaks quite rapidly, but clearly and distinctly. His earnest manner secures the attention of his audience immediately and holds it through the sermon.

The Livingston avenue people will be assured large congregations if they have as able men in their pulpit as they have had since they have been without a pastor. Next Sunday Rev. Mr. Freaker, of Scotch Plains, will preach both morning and evening.

Live Times at the Boys Club.

If a boy's enjoyment is to be measured by the amount of laughter and the volume of shouts he gives vent to, then the enjoyment of the 60-odd members of the Boys Club who attended last Saturday night's entertainment simply cannot be measured, for they did laugh and shout till the house almost shook.

One of the main supports of these entertainments, Miss K. Erskine, recently was in Boston, and thence brought the chief feature of the last entertainment. A bag of candy was suspended from the ceiling; and one member of the club, after being blindfolded, was given a stick and told to hit the bag; after three trials some other member took his place. What hurrahing and shouting greeted the vigorous strokes with which large holes were cut in the ——— air! That they did not decrease in volume when one actually did hit the bag, may be imagined. Besides, when the bag was hit and the candy rolled all over the floor, the rest of the boys had a lively scramble for it.

A Trip to Chinatown.

Hoyt's merriest farce, "A Trip to Chinatown," is announced for Thursday night in Music Hall, and all lovers of Hoytian humor will find much joy thereat. Of all the so-called farce comedies which have delighted New York for a decade, "A Trip to Chinatown" captured the prize of metropolitan endorsement easily succeeding in packing Mr. Hoyt's beautiful theatre nightly for more than 600 nights. After this record-breaking run, the piece was transferred to Chicago and enjoyed a protracted stay at the Grand Opera House. The great popularity of this lively little skit may be attributed to its exuberant wit, captivating situations, pretty music and kaleidoscopic array of costumes. It is full of pretty girls, and they disport in habits of richest coloring and nattiest make.

Gun Club Banquet at Finderne.

The Raritan Gun Club, consisting of the following parties: George B Cramer of North Branch, W Camman, Hon J D Bartine, J R Garretson, Dr H G Wagoner, W W Davenport and James Brown, Jr, of Somerville, P V Z Stryker, Dr J P Hecht and A B Rohn of Raritan, enjoyed a very elaborate spread at The Finderne Friday night. The menu card was well filled, and some daintily delicious dishes were served proving Mine Host White a thoroughly competent caterer. After dinner had been disposed of, bowling, pool and billiards were indulged in.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; your price 45c and 90c

THE THIRD ASSEMBLY.

MANY GUESTS PRESENT FROM OUT OF TOWN.

Grip's Prevalence Causes Notable Absences—Many Dinners Before the Dance.

The third Assembly, which was held last night in the Casino, was quite as successful an affair as its predecessors have been. The patronage of these dances has been more generous this year than ever before, and the management has been so admirable in every respect that nothing but favorable comment has been heard from the many subscribers. The dance last night was marked by the unusual number of people present from out of town for this time of the season. The New Year Assembly has formerly been the only one of the dances at which any large number of visitors has been seen, and it speaks well for their continued popularity when subscribers care to fill their houses with guests at each recurring dance.

People were generally late in arriving last night, as there were many dinners both large and small before the Assembly, but the floor was well filled by 10:30, and dancing was kept up until after the prescribed stopping time. Where people do not get fairly into the spirit of dancing until after 10 it seems rather early to stop the music at 1, or even half-past, but the tendency everywhere seems to be toward early dances both in beginning and ending, as witnessed by the pretty idea of the "Cinderella Dances" in New York, where the music stops promptly at midnight and everyone turns his attention to the supper, which is deferred until the last, before going home to seven or eight good sleep hours.

The decorations of the Casino were very pleasing last night as usual, and evinced the energy and good taste of the patronesses. Rugs, sofa cushions, comfortable chairs, scarfs, candelabra, and palms, were arranged with happy effect. Some of the blue and white bunting from the Columbia dance had been left in place, while festoons of the running cypress, imported from Virginia by one of the patronesses, covered the canopy of the fireplace and hung in bunches from the electric lights around the room.

It is only necessary to say that Elliott's orchestra played to assure one that the music was of the best. Mr. Elliott himself was obliged to be absent, but his substitute was very satisfactory. The floor of the Casino needs no bush, and proved as good as ever, with the exception of the corners which were a little rough. The supper was most excellent in every way and the tables looked remarkably well, being very prettily arranged and dressed with candelabra. The entire supper arrangements were under the direct supervision of John Tombs, the club's head waiter, who deserves great credit for its success. The menu, which was rather more elaborate than usual, was as follows:

Consomme Rolls
Lobster Salad.
Chicken Croquettes Watercress Sandwiches
Fancy Ices Little Cakes
Coffee Lemonade

The next and last of the assemblies will be on Monday February 25, all the dances being placed before Lent instead of having one in Easter week as has been usual heretofore on account of the unusual length of the season.

All the patronesses were present last night with the exception of Mrs. Marion Ackerman, but a number of the subscribers were kept away by the grip, which has left scarcely a house uninvaded.

"Home, sweet home," was repeated three times by the good-natured musicians before the enthusiastic dancers were willing to betake themselves to the coat rooms.

Among the subscribers and their guests were:

Major and Mrs Robert L Burnett, Mr and Mrs William L Saunders, Mr and Mrs J W Reinhart, Mr and Mrs Benjamin Hexeman, Jr, Mr and Mrs Louis G Timpson, Mr and Mrs J Parker Mason, James S Anthony, Miss Lawrence, Miss Reinhart, Mr and Mrs Josiah Brown, John M Whiton, Miss Whiton, Mrs Charles F Abbott, Miss Abbott, Mr and Mrs James H Hallock, Mr and Mrs Henry P Talmadge, Miss Talmadge, Miss Norris, Mr Grey, Harry Talmadge, Miss Bessie Stokes of New York, H C Munger, Henry A Patton, Walter F Murray, Mr and Mrs J C Vail, Miss Carrie L Vail, Arthur F Freeman, Mr and Mrs Albert H Atterbury, W T Kirk, Mr and Mrs James P McQuaide, A L C Marsh, R O Beebe, A V Henderson, Harry J Borden, Mr Caldwell, Fred Walz, Miss Walz, Miss Mefatire, Howard Beebe, Dr B V Hedges, Mr and Mrs L W Serrell, George T VanBoskerck, J Gilmore Drayton, Thomas R VanBoskerck, Frank C Cokefair, the Messrs Yates, Mrs Randolph, Miss Randolph, A L Streuli, Edward VanBuren, Laurens VanBuren, Mr and Mrs F H Wills, Mr and Mrs Ernest Ackerman, Irving West, O T Waring, Howard Huntington, Edward Field, the Misses Holly, Miss May Waring, L B Waring, Mr and Mrs W J Roome, Mr and Mrs J T Scott, Mr and Mrs Joseph Sandford, Jr, Mrs Joseph Sandford, Dr F C Ard, Clifford McGee, Gifford Cooley, Julius Erickson, Mr and Mrs Wilder, Miss Wilder, J M Hallock, J F Hallock, Mrs VanBoskerck, William Runyon, Charles Spencer and Sydney Smith of Bergen Point, Constantine Miller and McCready Sykes.

DOES NOT AFFECT SCOTT'S.

This Decision Concerns an Old Machine He No Longer Uses.

Judge Acheson has filed in the United States Circuit Court in Trenton an opinion in the case of Robert Hoe et al., the press manufacturers of New York and London, against Walter Scott of this city, in which he holds that the defendant has infringed on seven claims of the plaintiff's patent for a paper folding machine.

The plaintiff's invention is to "accomplish the longitudinal folding of fabrics on the run by means of interval guides and co-operating external burners which may be rapidly made and quickly adjusted in working order without necessitating great accuracy of construction, nicety of adjustment, or any considerable expense".

The invention consists in mechanism to produce "a two-part folding operation", in contradistinction to "the one-part folding operation".

Mr. Scott told The Press this morning that he would appeal the case, as the decision was directly against the evidence. He further said it did not affect his present machinery as he was no longer using the machine over which suit was brought, he having perfected a better folding device.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. David Van Buskirck of West Front street is recovering from the grip.

Raymond Miller of LaGrande avenue has entirely recovered from the grip.

Mrs. Charles Van Nest of New street, who has been ill with pneumonia, is improving.

S. Clinton Crane of East Second street is able to be out again after a severe attack of the grip.

Mrs. Stephen FitzGerald of Somerset place, who fell a short time ago and fractured an arm, is rapidly recovering its use.

Kate Claxton, who appeared in her familiar role in "The Two Orphans" in Music Hall last night, was born and bred in Somerset County.

Edward Kline of East Sixth street, who has had the grip, is slowly recovering. He had hoped to attend to his business in New York Monday but, not recovering as rapidly as he wished, will not be able to go until Wednesday.

The funeral services of the late Miss A. A. Vandenbergh were held yesterday morning at 10, conducted by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of decedent. The body was taken on the 12:06 train to New York, and interment made in Greenwood Cemetery.

Wm. M. Stillman and wife returned yesterday from a three-weeks trip to the Bermudas. Mr. Stillman completely recovered from the grip, and enjoyed a most delightful time during his sojourn. Mrs. Stillman was also much benefited by the change.

R. W. Rice, who is confined in a retreat in Philadelphia, is daily growing worse. His brother Clarence returned last evening from a visit to him, and says that while there was an improvement in his condition for the better a short time ago, he has since had a decline and that he now is in a critical condition.

Forty men were on the floor of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium at the session of the first class last night. Physical Director MacPhie put the class through a calisthenic drill with dumb bells and Indian clubs. Some quick work was performed on the parallel bars and vaulting horse; then the class had quite a run on the track, adding several arm movements as well.

THE STRIKERS GIVE IN

Practical End of the Trolley Trouble in Brooklyn.

Connelly's Proposition That the Men Would Return on Old Terms Rejected—Lewis and Wicker Will Employ Them as Individuals, but Norton Don't Want Them.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 29.—The action of Master Workman Connelly in offering to the presidents of the trolley companies to declare the strike off within six hours and that the men would waive all demands and go back to work on the old terms, if they were permitted to do so, practically ends the strike in this city, although the strikers still have the one doubtful victory in the courts. The men in reality surrendered to the companies, only to be told that their places were filled.

President Norton, of the Atlantic avenue system, contemptuously spurned the offer of his old men to return and threw their formal letter in the waste paper basket. President Lewis, of the Brooklyn Heights company, sent a formal reply in which he courteously informed his old men that he would take them back as individuals upon his own terms as long as he had vacancies to fill. President Wicker, of the Queens County & Suburban company, replied also, offering his men, as individuals, what places remain on his lines.

Of the 7,000 men who went out on strike on Jan. 14, there are places left for less than one third. It is not at all certain that these will accept the places.

Strike Leader Connelly declares that the strike is not over by any means, and that the men tendered their services in order to remove all questions of fact as to the ability of the roads to obtain men, and thus furnish a new basis upon which to apply for peremptory mandamus against the companies.

The men say they have funds and will fight the companies by process of court and by boycott, until the companies give in.

The strike is practically over as the companies have gradually resumed the operations of their lines until every important one is in operation. Acts of violence still continue, and the restoration of the usual peace and quiet of the city is yet to be established.

Two men were shot by policemen in different encounters with mobs. One man is dying in the hospital. The other is less seriously wounded. A dozen other rioters have been injured by policemen's night sticks and the butt ends of revolvers in hand to hand encounters. Non-union motormen have been assaulted and severely beaten. Car tracks have been blockaded, car windows shattered, and trolley wires cut. There occurrences have been less frequent than during the days of last week, but they indicate that the safety of the public is far from being established.

Early in the day the troops of the 1st Brigade began leaving for their homes. Gen. McLeer and the civil authorities reached the conclusion that the peace could be maintained by the 2d Brigade, with its 2,800 men. New York's crack regiment led the way out of the city. The 71st followed, and, later in the day, the 22d, and 12th Regiments, Troop A, and the 1st, 2d, 8th and 9th Battalions, and the 1st Battery marched out of town. There was rejoicing in the ranks of the men who had served the state and acquitted themselves nobly during the eight days of riot duty.

The strike has lasted fifteen days. It has cost the railroads half a million dollars. The troops have cost the city $183,000. The strikers have lost $90,000 in wages, and the roads in loss of revenue $228,000. The general paralysis of business has amounted to a loss of many millions to the general public. Two lives have been sacrificed and many people injured.

District Master Workman Martin J. Connelly was seen at the strikers' headquarters on Bridge street last evening. He said that he had no formal reply to make to President Lewis' letter because he had not been able to get his committee together for a conference and he doubted whether a meeting would be held before this evening, as one of the committee had gone to New Jersey, another was out in East New York, and others were scattered in different directions.

"We will probably come to some understanding with Mr. Lewis," he said. "The statements published in several newspapers that I have declared the strike off is absolutely untrue. There is no necessity for doing that, for our people are in a much better condition to-day than they were on the day the strike was declared, notwithstanding the fact that the companies are making strenuous efforts to create dissensions among our men and that the companies owe them yet a week's pay. I am not going to surrender unless the companies come to terms satisfactory to the men. I have not heard from Norton or Wicker. So far as Norton is concerned he is making a big bluff when he says that he is prepared to operate his lines. Why, he hasn't got cars enough in condition to do so even if the strike were declared off now. A number of his cars were disabled by the inexperienced motormen and it will take thousands of dollars to repair them."

New York, Jan. 29.—Mrs. Gertrude Frank Harper, wife of Franklin Harper, of the publishing firm, is dead of pneumonia at her home in this city, aged 38 years. She had been ill since last Tuesday.

BAD RAILROAD WRECK.

Thirteen Cars in a Heap and Several of the Crew Injured.

Winsted, Conn., Jan. 29.—The worst wreck the Philadelphia, Reading & New England railroad has experienced in years occurred yesterday, two miles west of here, when east bound local freight No. 22, in charge of Conductor Thomas Burns and Engineer John McMahon, both of Hartford, composed of fifteen cars and a caboose, left the rails on a curve.

Thirteen cars were piled up and jammed into one mass of twisted iron. The engine ran off the rails for 200 feet beyond the wreckage. Engineer McMahon, his fireman, Louis Brands, of Hartford, Brakeman William Loomis, and Flagman John Burke, were injured. Brakeman Michael A. Granville and William H. DeMunn were bruised and cut. Granville was taken out from under a pair of car trucks. DeMunn was taken to the Hartford hospital, with hands injured, and perhaps both men are internally injured. Engineer McMahon and Conductor Burns think a brake shoe on the box car behind the engine dropped, causing the car to jump the rails, pulling the engine off. The train was running down grade at fifteen miles an hour. At the time of the accident all the train-men were on top of the cars attending to the brakes, and the accident threw all the brakemen except Granville, a distance of twenty feet into the meadows. Fourteen cars were smashed beyond usage. The loss is estimated at $40,000. Care were piled into the air twenty-five feet.

BOTH WERE DROWNED.

Two High School Scholars Skate Into an Open Channel.

Fall River, Mass., Jan. 29.—A distressing drowning accident occurred on North Watuppa pond last evening. The ice there was in fine condition but near the shore there was an open channel caused by a rapid current. A row of electric lights have been erected on the pond for the convenience and safety of the skaters. Some of these went out and while fixing them it became necessary to put out all the others.

A party of high school scholars were skating on the pond, among them George Fisher and Susie Terry, each aged 15 years. The two were skating towards Westport but owing to the darkness they did not notice where they were until they went into the open channel.

The cries for help were heard, and frantic efforts were made to save them, but owing to the dangerous condition of the ice in that vicinity no one could reach them and they were drowned in the presence of about 700 skaters, mostly young people.

Vigorous efforts were made to find the bodies, and within a few minutes that of the girl was found. Twenty minutes later the boys body was raised to the surface. All efforts at resuccitation failed. This is the first accident of the season on this pond, although not less than 5,000 people have skated there during the winter.

SUSTAINED THE COLLECTOR.

The Treasury Department Upholds an Important Ruling.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 29.—Information has been received here that the treasury department has sustained the collector of the port in an important ruling concerning American fisheries whereby it is decided that when the fisheries are prosecuted under the American flag, under the direction of American skippers and in American bottoms, the vessels are entitled to land the fish free of duty even though aliens were employed in foreign waters to assist in the enterprise.

An issue was raised in the case of the schooner Willie L. Swift which arrived at Philadelphia a few days ago with a cargo of herring caught off the shore of New Foundland. On the return voyage the vessel touched at Provincetown where the collector referred to the secretary of the treasury the question whether or not the fish were dutiable. Afterwards the vessel was allowed to proceed to Philadelphia where the catch was landed upon the payment of a deposit of $1,000.

Upon the recommendation of the collector there this amount was returned to the agent of the vessel. This decision is in direct line with those previously made favoring the interests of American fishermen.

WARSHIP REPORTED SINKING.

News Received in a Bottle Found Off the Coast of Zante.

Athens, Jan. 29.—The Greek government and the British minister have received information that a bottle was found off the coast of Zante and in the bottle a paper with these words: "Sinking rapidly. Inform German admiralty. German warship Stein."

The Stein is an iron and wood frigate of 2,810 tons. She was built at Stettin in 1879. Recently she had been used as a training ship. The German naval list for 1894 says that the Stein carried 446 men and was assigned to the East American station.

CHINESE PEACE BASIS

Independence of Korea and a Money Consideration.

Willing To Give Fifty Million Dollars as an Indemnity and a Solatium of Ten More for Bereaved Japanese Families—No Cession of Her Territory.

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 29.—The following Oriental advices have been received here under date of Tokio, Jan. 12:

It is alleged that the basis of peace mapped out by the Chinese government for the guidance of its envoys is an indemnity of from thirty-five to fifty million dollars (gold); a solatium of ten million dollars for the families of the Japanese officers and soldiers who were killed in the war; a formal acknowledgement of the independence of Korea, and an exchange of prisoners, but no cession of so much as an inch of Chinese territory. China offered these terms two months ago, through the non-official channel of communication that has always been kept open, and they were rejected.

It is a mockery on China's part to talk now of the independence of Korea. She has proved herself incompetent to exercise any sort of control in the peninsula or afford any sort of protection to her so-called tributary against foreign aggression. As for an indemnity, before the war is over Japans direct expenditure will have considerably exceeded the sum supposed to be contemplated by China.

What the Japanese nation wants is some guarantee of continued peace. The payment of a paltry sum of money and a totally worthless declaration about Korea's independence constitutes no guarantee whatever. Many thoughtful Japanese are beginning to ask themselves whether their country must not except a much larger responsibility in the sequel of the war than she originally contemplated, after all the real question at issue is whether China is to emerge from or remain in her old grave of conservatism. If the latter, she will be a perpetual menace to the peace of the Orient. It will always be possible for her by her spending sufficient money to hire fifty or a hundred Von Hannakens to organize and lead her armies, thus becoming a great military force without any of the moral restraints imposed by close association with the civilized tendencies. Japan would then be living side by side with a menace so formidable that she would be condemned to the fate under which some of the European states are now groaning.

The Chinese envoy, his excellency, Chang, is understood to have left Pekin on the 7th of January. The deliberation of China's procedure in this important matter is remarkable. More than a month has elapsed since the appointment of an envoy to sue for peace was publicly announced as a step to be immediately taken. Had the necessary decree been issued at once and had the envoy set out without delay, he might have traveled direct to Taku and thence taken a steamer for Japan, arriving at Hiroshima by December 20 at least. But China dilly-dallied as usual and Chang, on receiving his appointment, sent to the United States for an adviser and delayed his own departure from Pekin until the ordinary route being closed by ice, nothing remained but to travel overland to Shanghai, a journey of at least a month.

Doubtless the envoy is not to blame; the fault lies with his government. During the era of negotiations immediately preceding the war, when Great Britain was endeavoring to reconcile the two empires, the queen's representative in Tokio complained of the terrible delay involved in obtaining from Pekin any answer to telegraphic communications.

To that the British minister in Pekin pertinently replied:

"The work that you can accomplish in three hours with the foreign office in Tokio costs me three weeks to achieve with the Tschung-li-Yamen (foreign affairs board) in Pekin."

China is consistent. She never hurries herself, and Chang will be just two months later than he might ave been. Had he been acting on behalf of a western state, he would have reached his destination on Dec. 20, at least. Acting on behalf of China, he will probably reach it on Feb. 20, at the soonest.

Hazle Mine Fire Under Control.

Halzeton, Pa., Jan. 29.—The L[illegible] officials now believe that they have the fire in the Hazle mine under control. Supt. Lathrope said that they may overcome the fire in two or three days, but it may possibly take a few weeks. They hope to ultimately extinguish it without resorting to extreme measures.

Ingrain Carpet Weavers' Trouble.

Philadelphia, Jan. 29.—The report that a strike of ingrain carpet weavers, involving from 14,000 to 18,000 men, was imminent here is not liable of fulfilment. Considerable dissatisfaction undoubtedly exists among the weavers, but it is not probable they will strike in a body.

STRAIGHT TO THE POINT

Words that Cut Like Blades of Steel.

A POWER WHICH NOTH NG LIVING CAN RESIST.

Men and Women Bow Before It in Silent Awe and Admiration.

Many persons ordinarily of strong judgment will feel their conscience smite them when they think what they might have been had they but taken the advice of those who know from experience.

Mrs Florence Taylor, of 4 Courtland place, Bridgeport, Conn, speaks straight to the point when she tells of the frightful suffering she has endured and how she was saved by the wonderful action of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, the greatest medicine ever known to weak, tired, exhausted and nervous humanity. Read the following letter written with an overflowing heart, and a pen that can honestly proclaim miracles.

"For four years I had been troubled with nervous debility and hysteria in a most aggravated form, causing sleeplessness and mental depression. At one time I feared blood poisoning For months I was confined to the bed.

"My constitution wasted and I totally lost my appetite. Doctors, of whom I had many, failed to give me any relief. Last September I was advised to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy

MRS. FLORENCE TAYLOR.

"I did so and the almost immediate change it wrought was wonderful. I regained my appetite, the dizziness in my head departed, my nerves were made perfectly strong it renewed my interest in life and made me feel, in fact, like another woman.

"After taking six bottles I thankfully proclaimed myself well and strong. Those six bottles of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy did for me what hundreds of dollars and numerous physicians failed to do. I cannot do credit to its merits. Truly it should be lauded to the skies. I advise everybody to take it."

Think that letter over, sufferers. If you have weak nerves, tired bodies, bad blood or indigestion have worked too hard and are run down, try the best medicine in the world for these conditions, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will cure you It gives health and strength to everybody.

It is the great discovery of Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st., New York City, and is perfectly harmless. The doctor is the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He can be consulted free, personally or by letter, and this fact places his great remedy above all other medicines.

AS WE SEE THINGS.

INFLUENCE OF THE INNER LIFE ON THE EXTERNAL WORLD.

How an Individual or a Scene May Have an Entirely Different Appearance to Two Persons—Happiness and Sorrow Made by Ourselves.

There have been philosophers who declared that the earth on which we stand and the stars on which we gaze have no real existence, but are merely the outcomes of our inner selves. Perhaps the best answer to this is that the mind itself, at least that of most people, refuses to receive the idea. The difference between the me and the not me is too sharply defined in the inner consciousness to permit Bishop Berkeley's notion from taking root within us.

Yet we cannot afford to overlook the germ of truth which this idea contains. Though not literally the creation of our thought, the outer world is to each one of us largely that which we make it. Nature herself, in all her varied scenes, whatever she may be in reality, shows herself to us in the light which we throw upon her. One man looks at a landscape and sees land and water, grass and trees, hills and plains, and nothing more. Another, a farmer, sees the growing crops, the fallow land, the noxious weeds, the prospect for future tillage and the obstacles to be overcome. Another, with a painter's eye, sees every variety of form and color, proportion and perspective, harmony and contrast, beauty and sublimity. To the melancholy man all is tinctured with gloom—a leaden pall covers even the gayest scenes—while to the joyous everything seems bright and glad, and even the dreariest of November days only suggests the radiant sunlight that is sure later on to struggle through the clouds.

So with the sights of a city. For each of us as they take on the aspect of our own mental condition. How differently they impress the citizen who has spent his life among them from the foreigner who views them for the first time! What a different message the stately and magnificent buildings bear to the absorbed man of business and to the architect who appreciates every detail of their construction!

If there is so wide a divergence in the aspect which inanimate things have for us, the difference is still greater in the way we regard the men and women by whom we are surrounded. Character is a complex thing, difficult to detect, impossible to fathom, yet we presumptuously venture to gauge and pronounce upon it with the smallest modicum of knowledge. It is curious to notice how differently the same person will impress various individuals. His friend will perhaps see no fault in him, his enemy no virtue. One will put faith in him; another will suspect his every action. One will deem him cold hearted; another will think him affectionate and kind. It must be that their own personalities are reflected in him, and that to a certain extent he does thus become for a time, while under their influence, what they suppose him to be always. It is certainly true that the good and gentle find far more goodness and gentleness in the world than those who are deficient in such qualities. It is the selfish man who is the keenest to detect selfishness in others; it is the overbearing who complain most of the arrogance and pride with which they are met, and the unjust who murmur at the injustice they receive. On the other hand, the loving and sympathetic discover love and sympathy everywhere; the noble and true bring to light nobility and truth which might otherwise be hidden. Thus to a large extent we develop the character of those we meet. By a subtle magnetism we draw like to like and evolve out of other personalities the characteristics of our own.

Even the outward circumstances of life are largely what we ourselves make them. We are accustomed to consider prosperity a blessing and adversity a curse, but quite frequently they change places. It is the spirit in which they are received that determines their result. The rich and self indulgent man, surrounded by luxury and opportunity, may be far less happy than his poorer neighbor who brings industry, fidelity and generosity into constant exercise. The same privileges that raise one young man to honor and usefulness are a snare and temptation to another. The same recreation that invigorates one enfeebles another. The same sorrow that softens one and leads him out of self to works of kindness and helpfulness prostrates another and renders him valueless. It is that which is within a man that so acts upon the externals of life as to decide their results to him, and through him to others.

If this be so, then happiness or wretchedness is largely in our power, and most of our complaints only bear witness to our own remissness. We may rightly recognize the futility of struggling against outward events which we cannot control, but we can always bring to bear upon them such a spirit and influence as shall turn evil into good and bitter into sweet.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A Startling Announcement.

An English literary man who was on the verge of bringing out a book at the Pitt Press ordered his proofs to be sent to him at a house where he was engaged to dine out, intending to look them over in the half hour after dinner. The printer's boy however, was late in bringing them, and the gentlemen had already rejoined the ladies in the drawing room when the company was electrified by hearing the sonorous voice of the butler announcing, "The devil from the Pitt has come for Mr. Jones!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Value of a Hyphen.

I recall an advertisement which actually appeared, sans hyphen, recently in a London daily, to wit: "Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Levi, having cast off clothing of every description, invite an early inspection."—Chap Book.

MAKING TURPENTINE

AN EXTENSIVE INDUSTRY IN CERTAIN SOUTHERN STATES.

How the Trees Are Tapped and the Resinous Gum Gathered—Departments and Divisions In the Work All Under the Keen Eye of the "Rider."

Dialect writers find a fruitful field among the "Tar Heels" of the Carolinas, Alabama and Georgia. In the cool depths of the turpentine woods, with the gashed trees yielding up their resinous gum, the balmy air and the picturesque "hackers," "dippers" and "scrapers," with the ever vigilant "rider" watching everything, is a phase in southern life which has long been the delight of authors and the pleasure of artists. The crudity of the implements and the stills used in making turpentine and rosin lend additional interest to this old industry, and the gypsylike habits of the turpentine makers add to their ragged, illiterate charms.

Turpentine is the distilled gum of the pine trees of North and South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia and part of Florida. The season begins when the first spring sap rises and ends when cold weather checks the flow of the tree's blood. In January or February the "hacker," with his keen bladed ax, begins the round which ends with the season. He is the expert of the woods and knows his trees and just how much hacking they will stand. His task is to cut the "boxes" in which the thick gum of the wounded tree will collect. A box is a wide incision about six inches deep, a wedge shaped cut in the tree, and he hacks from 90 to 100 boxes a day. The first boxes are cut near the roots of the tree, and they are cut as close together to the height of a man's head as can be done without killing the pine. The hacker leaves a width of bark between each box so as to preserve the vitality of the tree. When the trees are leased to the turpentine makers, the terms of the lease limit the number of boxes to each tree, but when it is desired to work the pine to the fullest extent the gashes are carried up to a height of 20 feet or more.

After the hacker comes the man who "corners" the boxes. This "corner" is a cut in the top of the box to guide the sap into the cavities left for the gum, and the man who "works" the "crop" goes systematically from box to box, starting the sap anew with fresh incisions, working in this way 10,000 boxes during the season. The sap or gum fills the boxes with a clear, sticky, thick fluid, and this is removed by the "dipper." Scattered through the woods are barrels in which the "dipper" deposits the gum, which is then hauled to the still. About a quart of sap is taken from each box by means of the trowel shaped scoop used by the dipper, and then the hacker comes along and starts the flow afresh by wounding the tree again. The turpentine maker watches his men closely, for the Tar Heels are an easy going people and require to be urged by the "rider," who goes through the woods on horseback examining the crop, hurrying the dippers and hackers and sending the barreled gum to the still.

The first or "virgin" sap which flows in the spring makes the best rosin, and the poorest is the product of the hardened gum which is left on the sides of the boxes when the sap "turns down" in the fall. This is removed by the "scraper," who moves through the woods with his scraping tool, gathering the leavings.

The still is a large copper vat hooded with a close fitting cover in which is a funnel which in turn is connected with the "worm" of the still. This worm runs down into another vat near at hand, and in this vat the fumes or vapor of the heated gum is distilled into turpentine. Fire under the copper vat heats the gum, and the volatile parts rise to the funnel, pass into the still and are condensed by the water in the second vat into spirits of turpentine. The residuum left in the vat is the rosin of commerce, which is passed through a series of strainers and sieves to the barrels, which are made on the spot. The turpentine, however, cannot be barreled so easily, for it will work through an ordinary barrel. It is placed in white pine barrels which have been coated inside with several coats of strong, hot glue until the barrel is impervious to the subtle fluid.

The trees are worked for five or six seasons, and then the turpentine maker moves to another part of the woods. He started in North Carolina, crossed over to South Carolina and is still moving toward the gulf. Forest fires destroy the pines faster than the hacker does, for the flames sweep over large areas before they die out. Careful owners of turpentine woods have the pine straw and fallen underbrush raked away from their trees before the season begins, and collecting this material in some safe spot wait for a quiet day when no wind will cool the wet finger, and then they burn the rakings.

Negroes are common laborers of the turpentine woods, but white men are plentiful. They live in rough shanties in the woods, with the stables for the mules and horses near at hand. No work is more healthful than turpentine making, for it is all out of doors in the depths of the balmy, health giving pines, free from the malaria of the swamps and from sudden changes of weather.—Chicago Record.

Horsepower.

The difference between nominal, indicated and effective horsepower often puzzles people. Nominal horsepower is an assumed quantity, used for the convenience of makers and buyers in describing the dimensions of the engines. Indicated horsepower is the amount shown by computations of the indicator diagram. Effective or actual horsepower is the work an engine can do or the difference between the indicated horsepower and the horsepower required to drive the engine when unloaded.—New York Tribune.

THE SUNSET LEDGE.

ITS STORY AS TOLD BY THE OLD CALIFORNIA MINER.

The Two Contractors Who Refused to Heed a Timely Warning—Fifteen Years After a Blast Released a Pair of Grinning Skeletons.

In Butte county there is a quartz mine which has been abandoned for many years. Only the oldest residents of the vicinity remember the names of the locators, and scarcely a trace of the shaft and buildings remains. The ledge was discovered away back in the early days, when quartz first attracted the notice of prospectors; when many worthless ledges were worked because the miners had not yet learned how to read the value of such ore by the minerals in it, its location, dip and contact with other formations. The Sunset ledge was small, flinty and absolutely worthless, but the men who discovered it thought it worth development. They put down a shaft 100 feet in depth in wet and treacherous ground, and they used no timbers. Then they let a contract to two men—a Cornish man and an Irish man—to construct a tunnel 100 feet in length from the bottom.

Sometimes untimbered ground will stand apparently firm and safe for a time, and then, with no perceptible cause, suddenly get shaky and fall or close in. This was just what occurred at the Sunset mine. The two men in the tunnel had almost finished their contract and were "squaring up the face" of the tunnel when one of the men employed on the surface was lowered rapidly, ran to them and told them to leave the mine instantly because the shaft was closing in.

Why the men refused, in the face of a certain horrible death, to heed the warning is a mystery. The messenger begged and threatened, but they were obdurate. They laughed at him, told him to sit down and smoke a pipe with them and said they would leave the tunnel only when they had "finished her up in shape." Perhaps they imagined the man was playing a joke upon them or that it was a scheme to get them to leave the mine before their contract was fulfilled. At any rate, they refused to leave the mine, and the man who warned them returned to the surface only just in time to escape the fate of the men below. The shaft, with a roar, closed in, and they were entombed.

No effort was made to rescue the buried men. It was impossible to save them if they were not killed by the cave, and it was supposed that the tunnel had also collapsed. To sink a shaft 100 feet through treacherous ground would take a long time even in these days, when all the "modern appliances" for such work were at our disposal.

The mine was abandoned. Fifteen years went by. The story of the mine and the buried men became an old one. Their names were forgotten. They were like men who go down to the sea in ships and perish in sight of their homes. Their friends know that somewhere in the sea their bones are bleaching, somewhere in a great sepulcher upon which they may look, but into which they cannot see.

Fifteen years after the caving in of the mine some prospectors overran the locality. They were told the story of the Sunset ledge, and they went to its croppings and to the dump where the shaft had been and tested the ore they found there. Whether they found any gold is not known, but they found something which encouraged them. Perhaps they were not well versed in quartz and believed that any ledge would pay if developed. They resolved to reopen the mine. It was their opinion, they said, that the Sunset company had not put their shaft down in the right place nor sunk it deep enough. They (the new company) would choose a better spot, sink their shaft much deeper and tap the ledge on the pay shoot.

Old men who heard of it shook their heads and prophesied failure. They said no luck could come from disturbing dead men's bones, but the new company began and finished their shaft. Then they excavated a tunnel and raised an inclined shaft, hoping and expecting to strike the ledge where their judgment had led them to believe the pay shoot was.

One day, when they fired a blast, there was a rush of water down the incline, and the miners were driven out. After much trouble and expense a larger pump was put in and the mine cleared, and the cause of the sudden flow was explained. The upraise of the new company had entered the old tunnel of the Sunset company about 20 feet from its face. And there on a heap of rock, leaning against the walls, were two grinning skeletons. The bones of the dead contractors who had sat there grinning at their fate and for 15 years patiently waiting to be found were removed from the mine and given decent burial. The mine was again abandoned and will probably never be again opened.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Queer Ways of the Toad.

Paternal affection is not perhaps the precise emotion that we should be disposed to look for in the cold blooded frog. But the Surinam toad appears to exhibit this praiseworthy attitude of mind toward his numerous progeny. When his mate lays her eggs, the solicitous father places them carefully upon her back, where in due time their presence causes an irritation that produces numerous small holes, into which the eggs forthwith drop. In these cells, which, from mutual pressure, get to be hexagonal, like honeycomb, the young frogs are finally hatched, and for a bit scramble about their mother's back, hiding in their nurseries when danger threatens.—London News.

Newbern, N. C., was named after Bern in Switzerland by Baron de Graafewidt, a Swiss, who founded the town in 1720.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 29, 1895.

Defense of the Pass at Laing's Nek.

Jan. 28, 1881, the Boers of Cape Colony gave the British soldiers their first stunning blow in the Transvaal war. The Fifty-eighth regiment (British), of about 900 muskets and 180 mounted troops, stormed the height covering the Drakenburg pass over Laing's Nek. Daylight broke before the column started on its perilous march. The cavalry spurred quickly up the slopes on the left of the pass, but the Boers, equally quick and brave, hurled them back terribly cut up against the infantry. The infantry next dashed forward. Led by Colonel Deane, they were hurried up the steep slope in the face of an accurate musketry fire from the Boers, who did not flinch when confronted by cold steel. In fact, the Boers returned the British thrust in kind and charged their colors, taking one flag at the point of the bayonet after killing the guard. Although quite exhausted and out of breath as a result of their mad run up the hill, and raked down their line by Boer riflemen on their right and right rear, the British moved stubbornly on until Colonel Deane was killed and nearly all of the officers who went in on horseback had shared his fate. In the hottest of the fighting the combatants came so close that escape was all but impossible. Forty Boers gave up their lives within the British lines, resisting the charge by sheer physical strength, and in the ranks of the storming party the number wounded was but a trifle greater than the killed.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Napoleon In Battle.

Jan. 29, 1814, Napoleon fought the first desperate battle for the salvation of his waning empire. The remnant of his legions after the Russian campaign had been recruited to 70,000 men. The allies invaded France with 500,000, and in order to discourage enlistments in the battalions of the emperor circulated proclamations threatening to shoot down as bandits every French peasant found in arms.

Napoleon left the affairs of government in the hands of Louisa as regent and rode to the camps outside Paris, hoping to divide the enemy's forces before they could unite near his capital. He surprised Blucher's column at Brienne, the scene of his schoolboy life, overthrew the Russian cavalry, and by a brilliant charge captured the castle where Blucher was at dinner. The great Prussian escaped by sneaking away through a back door. Napoleon's personal valor showed at every point, recalling to his veterans the bridge at Lodi. At the head of the Old Guard he charged the rear of Blucher's line to cut off the retreat. Meanwhile the enemy's horse fell upon the French at the castle. The battle soon degenerated into an indescribable melee, in the walled grounds and park of the chateau. All those near Napoleon were cut down, but he defended himself with his sword until he backed against a tree which had been his favorite resort for study when a schoolboy. At St. Helena he declared that in that exciting moment he marked the tree and thought of the strange destiny which brought him again under its shelter. Regaining the castle, he found his cavalry marshal, Desmouettes, dangerously wounded and a body of Russian horse charging to retake their former ground. The gateways and passes were barricaded with dead soldiers. Only a single battalion of French was at hand, but the fiery energy of the emperor made him a host in himself. His soldiers caught the infection and would not be outdone in sublime daring. Led by Napoleon, this handful repulsed the last attack. Blucher retreated, and the French slept on the field as victors.

Excitement at the Meadows.

Hyde's meadows was the scene of lively fracas yesterday, in which someone would doubtless have been severely hurt if some of the employes on the Hyde property had not interfered. As it was, there were blackberry eyes, and strawberry mouths and noses in apundance.

The cause of the trouble was a fight between a little tough, commonly known as "Dutchy," and a more respectable boy of the same size, who was simply defending himself against the tiger-like attacks of the little ragamuffin.

"Dutchy" was urged on by the crowd of roughs standing around. One half-drunken bully named Pope, especially distinguished himself by his urgent appeals of "Do him, Dutchy," and when anyone stepped up to separate the combatants this particular individual would keep the fight going, by defending the boys with his own fists.

This was the case when a respectable young man stepped up to interfere in behalf of order. Pope sprang at him unawares and knocked him down, jumping on top of him. Pope repeatedly struck the prostrate lad about the head and shoulders. He was finally drawn off by several bystanders. He then started in to whip the whole crowd. He found this rather unsuccessful, so, after having had several unpleasant falls, he desisted.

The fight became general, but soon a treaty was made, to the effect that a certain tough and one of the peacemakers were to fight it out.

Owing probably to the maxim that "Prudence is the better part of valor", this particular peacemaker did not seem inclined to have a regular disgraceful ring fight, and was soon seen cutting a lively figure to gain the house of Mr Hyde or some neighbor, where he thought he would be safe.

A tough named McDonald caught him just as he was crossing the bridge leading from the meadows into Mr. Hyde's ground. McDonald also caught someelse for attempting to injure the peacemaker, received three straight blows which ended his part of the programme by knocking him off his feet three times in rapid succession.

The peacemaker was next seen sitting on the back steps of one of the neighboring houses.

Of course the crowd were anxious to see the fight out but in attempting to follow the peacemaker into Mr. Hyde's premises they were promptly driven back by the stable men with their dogs.

REMOVAL.
Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to
NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.
(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.
Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.
TO THE PUBLIC:
From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.
We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.
Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.
EDWARD TEEL, JR.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.
I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.
I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.
I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.
JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.
PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.
TO THE PUBLIC:
For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.
THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt,
of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave.,
Plainfield, N. J.
I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. E. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

METROPOLITAN NOTES.

New York's streets are a perpetual flower show. Any one that has known the city a dozen years must have noted the progressive growth of the retail flower trade. Not only does the business flourish on fashionable thoroughfares, but it has found its way to every quarter save the poorest. There are between 200 and 300 florists with shops, to say nothing of the myriad of street stand keepers and peripathetic men, women and girls. Wherever streams of home-going persons converge there is a flower stand wooing them to amiable extravagance. There are astonishing displays at a dozen elevated railway stations. All the new quarters far uptown have their florists, with all the luxuries, seasonable or unseasonable. There are plenty of second-hand dealers offering flowers that have already adorned the windows of the large florists, and in late spring and summer these flowers are so cheap that they come within the means of even the poorest.

Albert Bierstadt, the famous painter, has failed financially with liabilities $40,000 and nominal assets $100,000. He has long been in the front rank of American landscape painters. He was born in Dusseldorf, Germany, Jan. 7, 1820. He came to this country with his parents in 1831, and settled in New Bedford, Mass. He early developed a taste for art, and in 1851 began to paint in oils. In 1853 he went abroad to study at Dusseldorf and in Rome, making sketching tours during the summers in Germany and Switzerland. Returning to the United States in 1857, he made an extended tour through the West, and it was he who first put upon canvas the scenery in the Rocky Mountains, the Yosemit Valley and the Yellowstone.

Among his best know paintings are "Laramie Peak," (1861), now in the Buffalo Academy of Fine Arts; "Lander's Peak in the Rocky Mountains," (1863), for which James McHenry of London paid $25,000; "Looking Down the Yosemit," (1866), in the Lenox Library; "Settlement of California" and "Discovery of the Hudson," both in the Capitol at Washington; "In the Rocky Mountains, (1871), bought by Marshall O. Boberts for $40,000, and "Mountain Lake," and "Mount Cocoran in Sierra Nevada," (1878), now in the Corcoran Gallery, Washington.

In speaking of Mr. Bierstadt's work, a well-known artist said to a reporter: "There was a time when Bierstadt's paintings brought the highest of any American painter, and in London he was as popular as he was here. He was a great chap for courting royalty, and many of the English nobility were his friends. He was a particular favorite of the Marquis of Lorne and the Princess Louise. But painters, like women's gowns, get out of fashion. Since Bierstadt made a name for himself, other painters in landscape have came to the front, and I fancy Bierstadt's paintings would not sell for nearly as much now as they did ten or fifteen years ago. At any rate, they would not bring anything near their value at a forced sale."

Mr. Bierstadt was married about a year ago, for the second time, to Mrs. David Stewart, who, before she married the late millionaire banker, David Stewart, was Miss Mary E. Hicks. Mrs. Bierstadt is said to be very wealthy, having inherited the greater part of her first husband's large estate.

The field of charity has no fences. It is boundless, and will admit all the money that can be thrown into it. Charity tries the thoughts and the ingenuity of a great many rich people, who seek to help human failures and misfortunes. If people had more to give, there would still be ample opportunity for greater expenditure than marks the present time, so actively and energetically charitable. It is upon this humane and generous spirit that the Knights of Labor in Brooklyn, who are running the trolley strike, have sought to impose through an appeal that is fairly soaked with falsehoods.

"We have not appealed to force; we have acted as law-abiding citizens; we have refrained from violence," says this shameless wheedle. Yet at that very moment the streets of Brooklyn were lined with the entire police force and with militia of the State to protect the street cars, their passengers and operators, from being stopped and assaulted. Then the strikers go on to insult other citizens not engaged in the strike. They call the men "imported from other cities of the Union" to run the Brooklyn cars in the place of the strikers who have refused to run them, "the scum and drift-wood of humanity." Members of District Assembly 75 are honest citizens whom the railroad companies have "contaminated with the tramps and outcasts."

What self-respecting American joins District Assembly 75 of Brooklyn in calling men out of work "the outcasts of society?" What are Martin J. Connelly, the Master Workman, and his four associates in signing this request for money, that they can thus spit in the face of every man who comes seeking work which they have refused to do?

When the trolley men deliberately put themselves into the condition of asking charity, they were their own masters. An appeal for money to help carry on their devilish determination to keep other men from working in their places, and to maintain a situation in which the people of Brooklyn have their street cars stopped, and the men and money of Brooklyn and of the State of New York are called on to preserve the elementary rules of order and public convenience, is a gross abuse of the charitable impulse. The denunciation of non-strikers seeking work as "outcasts" is an inadmissible outrange.—N.Y. Sun.

Did Not Blame the Japanese.

The child often set the passengers laughing at her droll and ingenious remarks. Presently a remarkable fat Chinaman, in full Chinese costume, entered and sat opposite the child.

She looked at him in apparent amazement, and then, turning to her mother, with an air that showed she had given it up, asked:

"Mamma, what's that opposite?"

"Sh—. That's a Chinaman, my dear," answered the mother in a low tone of voice.

"The same kind of Chinaman papa says the Japanese are killing?"

"Yes, my dear. Don't talk so loud."

The child meditated a moment, and then said:

"Well—I don't blame 'em."

UNCLE PETER NOT SO RICH.

His Estate Valued at Not Over $30,000.—Terms of His Will and Codicil.

To wife Margaret the home situate on Somerset street, with all its belongings and surroundings, of whatsoever kind, together with the sum of $2,000 in cash.

To niece Susan Bonney $500

"To Emma Drake widow of George Wooden, deceased, the sum of $25, having given her during lifetime sums which I consider sufficient."

"For nephew Albert Wooden, no provision having already given him in lifetime sufficient sums."

To Alfred University of Alfred Centre, N. Y. $500.

Rest, residue and remainder, should any there be, to be divided equally between the children of niece Sally Allen aforesaid, provided said residue does not exceed $2,000, in which case the excess is given to Alfred University above mentioned.

All real and personal estate of whatever kind or wheresoever situate, to go to executors in trust, with power to dispose of same upon such terms and in such manner as to them seems meet and in accord with the above provisions.

The executors were George H. Babcock and William M. Stillman and the will was witnessed by Joseph A. Hubbard and J. D. Spicer.

A codicil was added April 1, 1890, changing bequest to wife Margaret deceased, that it shall sink into and become part of aforesaid residue.

The codicil was witnessed by William A. Coddington and J. Oakley Nodyne.

AMERICANS TOO SPEEDY.

They Beat the World in Pedalling the Bicycle.

The American wheelman, who have earned the reputation of being the fastest riders in the world, sustained this praiseworthy title admirably last season by creating new records for all the short distance marks. In 1889 the one mile record was 2 minutes 29 4-5 seconds, and the two mile record 5 minutes 11 seconds. In 1891 the safety wheel began to grow into popular favor, and Peter Berlo rode a mile on a solid tire wheel in 2 minutes, 30 seconds, which was record time. It was also in 1891 that the pneumatic tire first made its appearance in this country, and H. E. Laurie, an Englishman, who was visiting America on a racing trip, at once place the one mile record at 2 minutes 27 1-2 seconds, and the two mile record at 5 minutes 28 seconds. Laurie was the first man to race on a pneumatic tired bicycle in this country.

Up to the advent of the pneumatic tire the English racing men were riding a trifle faster than the Americans, but their supremacy was of short duration. The one mile straightaway record of 1 minute 35 2-5 seconds made by J. S. Johnson at Buffalo last October, electrified the wheelmen in this country and in Europe, but it was only a few weeks later that E. S. Leonart, a Buffalo rider went over the same course in 1 minute 35 seconds. The conditions under which records are now made differ materially from those of years ago. Constant changes have been introduced both in the construction of the wheel and in the method of acquiring records, the sole object being to favor the rider. Wheelman also have the advantage of improved tracks each year, and, as a consequence, succeed in placing the records lower and lower. Pace-making is a business that is essential to fast time, and the American racing men are rapidly acquiring the knowledge of how to pace a record man.

Before the visit of A. A. Zimmerman to England about four years ago, the foreign racing authorities placed little credence in American records. The easy manner in which "Zimmy" defeated all the amateur English riders at once compelled the wheelmen in England to recognize and accept American records. The fact that the latter are superior to the foreign times is conclusive evidence that the tracks and racing men of this country are speedier than those to be found anywhere else.

NO MORE BEAN GUESSING.

It is Held to Be a Lottery if Prizes Are Given in Such Contests.

Assistant Attorney-General Thomas, of the Post-Office Department, has ruled that it is immaterial whether the result of a lottery drawing is published as news without pay or as an advertisement with pay, newspapers containing the result of the awarding of such prizes are nonmailable. The only exceptions made are in the cases of newspapers publishing such matter in order to expose the concerns.

It is held also that the awarding of a prize to the person guessing nearest the number of seeds in a watermelon would be a lottery, though the guessing of the weight of a melon would not constitute a lottery if the guess were made after the melon had been lifted. The award of a prize to one guessing nearest the number of beans in a clear glass bottle, set in plain view, is also held to be a lottery

Birthday Party of a Gay Old Boy.

Elias Allen, town committeeman of Washingtonville, celebrated the 71st anniversary of his birthday yesterday in a most enjoyable manner. Last night one of the jolliest kind of crowds called on him and Mrs. Allen, and gave him a complete surprise.

When the people arrived Mr. Allen met them at the door, exclaiming "School must be out!"

The evening was pleasantly passed in dancing, singing, and telling stories of the good old days. Music was furnished by Harry Spencer, guitar, and Herbert Schutt banjo.

During the evening Mr. Allen was presented with a handsome sealskin cap, and Mrs. Allen with a fine knitted hood. Col. H. Newton Spencer made the presentations on behalf of the company.

Those present were: Mr and Mrs W C Smith, Miss Sadie Smith, Harry Baglin, Mr and Mrs Wm Shotwell, Mrs Summers, Miss Maggie Summers, Mr and Mrs W A Schutt, Miss Nellie Schutt, Louis and Herbert Schutt, Mr and Mrs Allan Schutt, Mr and Mrs R M Fountain, Mr and Mrs H Newton Spencer, Mr and Mrs Stephen Beeching, Mr and Mrs Chas Bloom, Harry Spencer, Mr and Mrs J. L. Gifford, Miss Carrie Spencer, Mr and Mrs Geo Demler, Jr, Mr and Mrs Stephen Beeching, Sr, Mrs Mary Spencer.

After all had partaken of the generous supply of good things provided, the merry party left for home, much pleased with the affair.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

WAR MAY BE AVERTED

Guatemala's Minister Will Make Concessions.

But Mexico Has Already Declared Her Programme and Will Stand by It in Every Detail—More Volunteers from Students in the Interior Towns.

City of Mexico, Jan. 29.—Late last evening it became known that the Guatemalian minister had been instructed to make concessions. Neither he nor any member of the cabinet would comment on this report. The opinion gains ground that war will be averted. However, all the concessions must come from Guatemala as Mexico has declared her programme and will stand by it in every detail. Should Guatemala revert to her evasive and dilatory policy, the rupture probably would come at once.

The inhabitants of the state of Chiapas, which borders on Guatemala, and the students of all the larger towns, have volunteered to help the government with money and men in anticipation of war.

President Diaz hastily summoned a council of ministers and remained several hours in consultation with them. As the mouths of all officials are sealed to inquirers, it is impossible to learn definitely the object of the meeting. It is generally understood, however, that the chief topic was the offer made by the United States government to mediate between Mexico and Guatemala. The United Press correspondent could not induce any minister to admit this, or that the United States had tendered their good offices to avert war. Senor Romero, the Mexican minister in Washington, is known, however, to have given President Diaz notice last Saturday of President Cleveland's intention.

The prospect of the slightest intervention on the part of the United States has elicited very bitter remarks from many public men and has caused considerable excitement among the people. The war fever runs so high, that any power trying to avert it must reckon with the hostility of public opinion. In the streets and places of popular resort there is but one sentiment and that is in favor of Mexico's settling her differences with Guatemala, once for all, without toleration of outside influences.

The newspapers want war. They denounce Guatemala as impudent and truculent and contend that she must be humbled before there can be any certainty of peace for her neighbors.

The report that Guatemala and Honduras have formed a triple alliance for offensive and defensive purposes is discussed with many ironical comments on the impotence of these small states. If Mexico take the field with her army, the newspapers say, she might as well fight all three as any one of them, as it would be no harder to beat them.

Another cabinet council was held, presumably to consider Guatemala's reply to Mexico's final demands. The nature of this reply has not been revealed, but the general understanding is that Guatemala is merely fencing for time. The only positive clue to the government's programme is found in the government's small arms factory where work is pressed forward with unflagging energy every hour of the day and night. An electric light plant was placed in the building to facilitate night work. The ranks of the regiments are filling rapidly and apparently everything is in readiness for a sudden mobilization.

THE OLIPHANT BANK FAILURE.

Cashier Stone, in Default of Bail, Spent Last Night in Jail.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 29.—Cashier W. J. Stone, of the Oliphant bank, which closed its doors yesterday, was arrested at the order of District Attorney John R. Jones, and in default of bail in the sum of $5,000 spent last night in the county jail.

He is accused of forgery and embezzlement and with making false entries in the bank books. It seems that Stone ruined himself to prop up the waning fortunes of the bank, signing fictitious names to his papers in order to make them negotiable securities. The arrest was made at the instance of Bank Examiner Krumbhaar.

The bank made an assignment to the Lacawanna Trust & Safe Deposit company of this city.

France's New Cabinet.

Paris, Jan. 29.—General Zurlinden, commander of the Fourth army corps, accepted the position of minister of war. This completes the new cabinet, which is constituted as follows: Prime minister and minister of finance, M. Ribot; minister of foreign affairs, M. Hanotaux; minister of war, Gen. Zurlinden; minister of marine, Admiral Besnard; minister of justice, M. Trarieux; minister of the interior, M. Leygues; minister of public instruction and worship, M. Poincare; minister of public works, M. Dupuy-Dutemps; minister of commerce, M. Andre Ledon; minister of agriculture, M. Gadeau; minister of the colonies, M. Chautemps.

The Steerage War.

New York, Jan. 29.—Instead of ending the steamship steerage war, as was expected, a new offensive measure has been adopted by the Cunard, White Star, and American lines, which on Saturday reduced the outward steerage rate from this port on their fast steamers, the Lucania, Campania, Majestic, Teutonic, New York and Paris, from $15 to $10.

Murderer Hampton Electrocuted.

Sing Sing, N. Y., Jan. 29.—David Hampton, the negro murderer, paid the penalty of his crime yesterday at the prison here. The apparatus worked perfectly and the criminal died in fifty-seven seconds after receiving the shock.

Tahsin Pasha Suspended.

Vienna, Jan. 29.—A late dispatch from Constantinople says that Tahsin Pasha, governor-general of Bitlis, has been suspended and Eumer Bey, member of the commission of inquiry, has undertaken his duties.

VOICES OF THE HUMAN HEART.

I felt the breath of the expiring year
Pass in the moaning breeze, and to my sight
Glistened each star, as 'twere a frozen tear
Upon the mute and lonesome face of night.
Time, in our breasts, that slumbers not nor sleeps,
Marks the faint murmur of eternity
As ever round with rhythmic impulse sweeps
Sweet little eddy of the life to be.

We look, and, lo! afar doth stretch the deep
With ebb and flow amid the storm and calm,
Raising its thunderous praises to heaven's steep
Or chanting to the shore a lowly psalm,
While in the ears that hear, from little hearts
That shrink and swell as with imprisoned love,
Steal o'er the silence of their inmost parts
The nearer echoes of a voice above.
—Thomas Harkness in Chambers' Journal.

FIRES IN JAPAN.

But For Open Spaces the Japanese Cities Would Burn Up.

One of the quaintest sights in Japan is a fire. Hundreds of houses are often burned in the space of a few hours, and little or nothing can be done to stop the progress of the flames, especially on a windy day. If you except the roof, which is made of tiles, Japanese houses are built entirely of straw wood, bamboo and paper. In the poorer districts houses are packed close together, and therefore if one happens to catch fire sometimes the whole street is burned down with incredible rapidity, and the fire only stops at some open space where it cannot possibly spread further. It is not unusual in Tokyo or some of the larger towns to hear of a thousand or even more houses having been destroyed in an afternoon or during the night.

No one is more afraid of fires than the Japanese, and high ladders are posted at short intervals all over the towns and in all the larger villages, on the top of which ladders a watchman sits all night and in case of fire rings a large bell hanging from the top. If rung at long intervals, the fire is distant, and one need not worry oneself about turning out of one's fountangs. If rung a little quicker, the fire is not far, but there need be no apprehension. But if the bell is vigorously and quickly tolled then you may as well say goodby to your house, because in perhaps a few minutes it will be reduced to a mass of ashes.

The Japanese are wonderful at turning out at all hours of the night, even for going to look at a fire, and men, women and children in the coldest nights in winter think nothing of walking five or six miles to go and look at a big blaze. If the fire happens to be near, the excitement increases in proportion to the probability of one's house being burned down. You see people half scared and screaming, getting water wherever they can in pails, wash basins, tubs or anything they can lay hold of and throwing it all over the woodwork so as to diminish the chances of its catching fire. Then as the fire draws nearer, and the only water available has already been consumed, the process of saving what one can is put into practice. The amido, or wooden shutters, and the choljis, paper walls, are quickly taken down and brought into a safe place; the mats are lifted out of their places, and with the few articles of furniture are quickly removed. So that when the fire comes it only destroys the wooden frame of the house and the roof. That is all. It is seldom that life is lost in these fires, except sometimes when children or old people are unable to move, and once surrounded by flames they cannot be reached and often perish.—Tokyo Letter.

A Fine Foot.

The elderly gentleman was getting a pair of shoes, and the clerk was striving to please.

"You have an elegant foot, sir," he said as he smoothed the leather down across the instep.

"Um," sniffed the old gent, eying him narrowly, "I guess you ain't the chap that was coming to see my daughter every other night till last week."—Detroit Free Press.

STOLIDITY OF THE CAMEL.

It Sometimes Gives Place to Revengeful Fury.

The history of the human race has taught us that, even as "the worm will turn," so man, downtrodden by tyranny, will seek revenge. Therefore it is not surprising to know that the usually patient and submissive camel will sometimes resent an overdose of abuse. Too dense to think of a way in which he can outwit his driver and so take him unawares, when roused to the pitch of fury, he rushes at the tyrant opened mouthed, and his formidable teeth and powerful jaws do serious damage.

Of this vindictiveness the driver is aware, and of the certainty that sooner or later the camel will seek revenge. Accordingly, it is customary for the person who fears his malice to throw his clothes before the camel, meanwhile hiding himself until the animal's fury has been expended in tossing and trampling on them, when the injury, real or supposed, is at once forgotten.

The camel will not identify himself with his driver or rider in the smallest way whatever. He steadily declines all advances. His eye never lights up with love or even interest at the approach of his master. Should you attempt to pat or caress him he will object in a very decided manner.

Good treatment or bad makes no difference to him. Life and its hard conditions are taken for granted. His view of things is far too serious. He is so absorbed and preoccupied that he has no time to waste on the gambols indulged in by all the other young animals.—Youth's Companion.

MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

Prompt Action Requested To Avert Disaster.

Mr. Cleveland Asks for an Issue of 8 Per Cent. Gold Bonds of Small Denomination—Not Unfriendly to Silver, but Unwilling To See Gold Banished from Our Country—Views of Senators and Representatives—What the Silver Men Say.

Washington, Jan. 29.—The president in his message to congress on the financial situation says in part: "Whatever may be the merits of the plan outlined in my annual message as a remedy for ills then existing, and as a safeguard against the depletion of the gold reserve then in the treasury, I am now convinced that its reception by the congress and our present advanced stage of financial perplexity necessitates additional or different legislation.

"The real trouble which confronts us consists in a lack of confidence widespread and constantly increasing in the continuing ability or disposition of the government to pay its obligations in gold. The only way left open to the government for procuring gold is by the issue and sale of United States bonds. The only bonds that can be so issued were authorized nearly twenty-five years ago, and are not well calculated to meet our present needs. Among other disadvantages they are made payable in coin, instead of specifically in gold, which, in existing conditions, detracts largely and in an increasing ratio from their desirability as investments.

"The most dangerous and irritating feature of the situation is found in the means by which the treasury is despoiled of the gold. We have outstanding about $500,000,000 of currency notes of the government for which gold may be demanded; and, curiously enough, the law requires that when presented, and in fact redeemed and paid in gold, they shall be reissued. Thus the same notes may do duty many times in drawing gold from the treasury. More than $300,000,000 in these notes have already been redeemed in gold and, notwithstanding such redemption, they are still outstanding."

He says our bonded interest-bearing debt has been increased $100,000,000 in the last year for the purpose of obtaining gold to replenish our coin reserve and that this large sum was expended without any cancellation of government obligations or in any permanent way benefitting our people or improving our pecuniary situation.

"More than $172,000,000 in gold have been drawn out of the treasury during the year for the purpose of shipment abroad or hoarding at home, while the obligations upon which the gold was drawn out are still outstanding and are available for use in repeating the exhaustive operation.

"Our gold reserve has again reached such a stage of dimunition as to require its speedy reinforcement, and it will hardly do to say that a simple increase of revenue will cure our troubles.

"Whatever ideas may be insisted upon as to silver or bimetalism, a proper solution of the question now pressing upon us only requires a recognition of gold as well as silver and a concession of its importance, rightfully or wrongfully acquired, as a basis of national credit, a necessity in the honorable discharge of our obligations payable in gold and a badge of solvency. While I am not unfriendly to silver, and while I desire to see it recognized to such an extent as is consistent with financial safety and the preservation of national honor and credit, I am not willing to see gold entirely banished from our currency and finances. To avert such a consequence I believe thorough and radical remedial legislation should be promptly passed. I therefore beg the congress to give the subject immediate attention."

Mr. Cleveland believes that the secretary of the treasury should be authorized to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring a sufficient gold reserve, but says that we should be relieved from the humiliating process of issuing bonds to procure gold from which the government or people are not benefitted. He then continues:

"The principal and interest of these bonds should be payable on their face in gold, because they should be sold only for gold or its representative and because there would now probably be difficulty in favorably disposing of bonds not containing this stipulation. I suggest that the bonds be issued in denominations of $20 and $50 and their multiples,, and that they bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum. I do not see why they should not be payable fifty years from their date.

"These bonds under existing laws could be deposited by national banks as security for circulation, and such banks should be allowed to issue circulation up to the face value of these or any other bonds so deposited, except bonds outstanding bearing only 2 per cent. interest, and which sell in the market at less than par. National banks should not be allowed to take out circulating notes of a less denomination than $10, and when such as are now outstanding reach the treasury, except for redemption and retirement, they should be cancelled and notes of the denomination of $10 and upward issued in their stead. Silver certificates of the denomination of $10 and upward should be replaced by certificates of denominations under $10.

"As a constant means for the maintenance of a reasonable supply of gold in the treasury our duties on imports should be paid in gold, allowing all other dues to the government to be paid in any other form of money."

In conclusion Mr. Cleveland confesses his reluctance to issuing more bonds and assures congress of his anxiety to co-operate with them in any reasonable measure of relief, and expresses a determination to leave nothing undone which furnishes a hope for improving the present situation or checking a suspicion of our disinclination or disability to meet with strictest honor every national obligation.

The message of the president on the financial question was received in the senate without manifestations of approval or disapproval and senators are unwilling to talk publicly about it.

The gold men oppose the feature which suggests the retirement of the greenbacks and the silver men repudiate it because it eliminates silver.

Mr. Jones, of Arkansas, was the only member of the finance committee who would say anything. "The proposition to issue a gold bond does not meet with my approval," said he, "nor can I approve any proposition that does not do something for silver. The message of the president gives no comfort to the friends of silver and, for one, I could not support a bill drawn on the lines he suggests."

Senators Harris, Vest and Voorhees, democrats, and Aldrich, Sherman and Morrill, republicans, declined to discuss the message.

Mr. Teller, speaking for the silver men, declared that the message indicated the continuance of the hostility of the president toward silver and showed, only too well, that he was not in favor of anything that could be construed as assisting that metal to regain its old place in the coin of the United States.

Mr. Peffer, speaking for the populists, said that from the president's standpoint he could have not done otherwise. It was, however, said Mr. Peffer, the first utterance that proved the populists were right on this question, for the message clearly admitted that the government was at the mercy of the bankers and brokers. This the populists have always contended, and now, said Mr. Peffer, the president admits the truth of the claims the populists have made.

Mr. Hill said: "The message states the situation very accurately. Permanent as well as temporary relief should be granted at once. I trust that there is good sense and patriotism enough in the present congress not to refuse consideration of this subject. The business interests of the country desire and demand action, and the democratic party cannot afford to antagonize that sentiment. My views were fully expressed in my speech before the democratic club of New York last Saturday evening, and it is unnecessary to repeat them."

At the house of representatives most of the leaders declined to discuss the situation. Chairman Wilson, of the ways and means committee, after passing the bill over to the banking and currency committee, declined to supplement what he said on the floor of the house by any further expression of opinion. Mr. Springer's opinions were of course embodied in the bill he presented. Ex-Speaker Reed declined to discuss the message.

Mr. Dingley (rep., Me.), said he cared to say nothing further than that he "was willing to aid in the passage of any measure intended to restore confidence."

Mr. Brosius (rep., Pa.), said: "I am unalterably opposed to the wholesale conversion of $500,000,000 non-interest bearing debt into an equivalent amount of interest bearing debt unless the necessity for so doing is demonstrated—and in my opinion such a measure cannot pass. It is enough to arm the secretary of the treasury with authority to redeem and cancel the legal tenders as they are presented for redemption without more."

Mr. Grosvenor (rep., O.) said: "I favor a measure which while protecting the treasury from the incursions of gold sellers will also add to the cash in the treasury by an increase of revenues from the tariff."

Mr. Coombs (dem., N. Y.) gave his entire approval to the bill and the message. He said he believed that the house would adopt the plan substantially as recommended.

Mr. Warner, of New York, said the retirement of outstanding treasury certificates was the score of the presidents message. That would solve the situation. Everything else was incidental.

The views of the silver men of the house regarding the message are thus epitomized by Mr. Bland (dem., Mo.): "The message sounds very much like the one sent to congress insisting upon the repeal of the Sherman law as the only thing standing in the way of the prosperity of the people. The president is right from his standpoint and from the gold standpoint. If the law which authorizes the redemption of all these notes in silver is to be ignored under the plea that it is necessary to maintain the gold standard, then, in order to do this, bonds must be sold for gold to redeem the greenbacks and treasury notes. But, on the other hand, the power given to the banks to issue their notes on gold bonds opens wide the door for the banks to flood the country with their money, redeemable by the government in gold, and have outstanding in a short time a larger amount of gold obligations in the way of national bank notes than we now have by virtue of the greenbacks and treasury notes. To maintain permanently the gold standard all money must be so contracted as to bring prices in this country down to the worlds level of prices. I insist that the proper remedy is to pay out silver the same as gold. That is the democratic creed and the Chicago platform, and the battle between bi-metallism and gold mono-metallism has begun right here and must be fought out."

Mr. Pence (pop., Col.) said: "I am opposed to the bill. It is contraction pure and simple. All the Sherman notes—all the greenbacks to be bought with gold bonds and cancelled and nothing put in circulation in their stead. It leaves this vast and growing country with no money added to the active circulating medium except such gold as may be found and brought to the mints and such notes as the banks may choose to issue."

THE CURE GOES DEEP.

Paine's Celery Compound Better than All Else--Makes People Well.

"The most miserable man," says the eminent Dr. Weir Mitchell, "is the one who is all the time anxious about his health and fearful of a relapse to some old disorder."

The cure of kidney disease must go deep. It is no superficial disorder. Pure, healthy blood, loaded with the richest possible supply of reconstructive material must be sent through the innermost part of the suffering organs.

For all kidney troubles there is an infallible remedy in Paine's celery compound. Its unfailing power to check at once the progress of disease, makes the effects perceptible at once.

Mr. O. H. Stoddard of Coventry Mills, N. Y., whose picture is given above, is a well known citizen. His strong testimony in favor of Paine's celery compound, the only medicine that could cure him, is vouched for by many of his townspeople. He says:

"I have been troubled with my kidneys since I was 9 years old, and have never been strong and healthy until the past few years. Early this summer my trouble came back again and my blood was out of fix. The doctor said that I had the back jaundice and ordered sarsaparilla; I tried it, but did not see any improvement.

"I had heard a great deal about Paine's celery compound and got a bottle, and now that it is nearly all gone I feel better and look better, and weigh today 176 lbs, while in the spring I only weighed 153 pounds. I can truly say that one bottle of Paine's celery compound is worth ten of sarsaparilla."

Why not try it?

In every drugstore in the country you can obtain Paine's celery compound.

Its use by thousands of people in every state and county and city in the land tells something of what it is accomplishing.

Every year it adds a ring of increase, taking in larger and larger territory, like the annual growth of a big solid oak. It over shadows today the weak imitations, the ordinary sarsaparillas, tonics or nervines as the tall forest tree does the thin scrub bushes. Paine's celery compound is not like them. It is the great discovery of a great scientist and philanthropist Prof. Phelps, of Dartmouth College.

Paine's celery compound is the tried discovery of the greatest physician America has produced. It cures nervous weakness heart palpitation, general lack of strength and all forms of weakness and rests and restores the jaded, fatigued brain and nerves, because it provides for the abnormal waste by a prompt supply of appropriate nerve-food.

CHAPTER II.

DR. MAXWELL GOES TO INVESTIGATE.

Dr. Robert Maxwell stood before the big fireplace in Rev. Mr. Warren's parlor. He had just returned with Anna from the funeral of Ned Ames. The girl had gone to give instructions about supper, with special reference to the tastes of her future lord and master who was to share that meal with herself and her father. When she reentered the parlor, Maxwell was grieved to observe that there were tears in her eyes. Indeed she had not ceased to weep since she had set foot in the Ames house.

"You should not let the memory of your sister's error prey upon you in this way," said Maxwell. "You must calm yourself before your father comes, for he will have all that he can bear without the sight of your grief."

"I will not let him see it," replied the girl; "but all the old sorrow has come back to-day. If we could only find her!"

"That is impossible now."

"You believe that she is dead?"

"Yes; and I could almost say I hope so."

"That is heartless! And you used to be such good friends. Why, you were much more fond of her than of me!"

"I looked upon you as a little girl in those days. You are right in saying I was fond of Charlotte. I always admired her, and I would believe no evil of her until doubt was impossible. You must not think me heartless because of what I said. Life must be worthless for her. Suppose we did find her; suppose, even, that she came back—"

"I would welcome her, and be a sister to her just as in the old days!" cried the girl, and the words came from her heart.

"She will not come," said Maxwell.

He shivered a little, and glanced behind him at the fire, which was blazing brightly.

Anna did not reply. She sat a long time in silence; and the young man, also, seemed to be abundantly occupied with his own thoughts. It was not a good augury for their future happiness that, with the wedding so near, they should make no better success of bearing one another's burdens.

Suddenly a murmur of voices arose in the street.

"Father is coming," said Anna, and she walked to the window. "Oh Robert what can this mean? The hearse is here. It has stopped before the house."

"OH, ROBERT! WHAT CAN THIS MEAN?"

Maxwell reached her side with a bound. His face paled at the sight. There were a hundred people in the street, surrounding the black-draped vehicle.

Mr. Warren was already at the door.

"Anna, my child!" he cried, "have you heard?"

She could not speak. What news the father had to tell, the reader already knows. He broke the direct shock of it as best he might, and the girl heard the astounding story without losing her self-command. At the first sight of her father's agonized face, she had resolved with all the firmness of her strong nature that she would not yield to any horror, for he would need her help.

The coffin was borne into the house. Anna saw her dead sister for a single moment. Then she led her father away, until with her love, and the strength that came in answer to their mutual prayers, he was himself again.

An hour later, the pastor and his daughter, with Maxwell and Frank Ames, sat in Mr. Warren's study and spoke of the awful mystery with reasonable calmness.

"I have sent for Mr. Harris," said Maxwell, naming a deputy sheriff who was the only officer of the law residing in Williston.

"There is no doubt, then," murmured the clergyman, "that my poor child died a violent death."

"None whatever," responded Maxwell. "Let me assure you, for what little consolation is possible, that her death was painless. There is an incised wound in the head, upon the left side of the head, about an inch behind the ear. She was struck down with a weapon, the nature of which I cannot determine further than to say that it was pointed and really sharp. It penetrated the skull and undoubtedly caused instant unconsciousness, and speedy death. That I know from other indications than the wound itself. I have known greater injuries not to kill, but the effect of shock in such cases varies greatly with different individuals."

Mr. Warren pressed his hand upon his forehead.

"I trust," he said, "that the feelings of my heart at this moment are not simply revengeful, but I would not be a human creature if I did not desire to see justice done upon the murderer of my child."

"We all desire that," said Ames. "Everything possible must be done, and done at once."

"Frank," said Maxwell, "were you with your brother when he died?"

"I was not. The truth must be told now, of course. I intended to deceive my parents in this matter, because I thought that they would suffer less if they believed that Ned had some one who knew and loved him by his side at the last. The fact is that I received a note by post from him which said: 'Come to see me at once if you care to see me at all. I am dying, and I want to say something to you for father and mother. If you don't come, or if you come too late, beg them to forgive me.'

"The note was wrongly addressed, and was delayed. The instant I received it I went to the house where he lay sick. He had already been put into his coffin, and it was sealed."

There was an anxious silence after these words.

"I know what you all think," said Ames. "But I can't believe it of Ned."

"Is any other conclusion possible?" demanded Mr. Warren, becoming greatly excited. "I have always suspected him of being the cause of Charlotte's flight. He wearied of her; murdered her, and took this means to hide her body from all eyes. It was a deep and villainous plot."

"There are grave difficulties," said Maxwell. "How was the death certificate obtained?"

"By bribery!" cried the clergyman. "Money will buy anything in cities. A doctor was bribed. It would not have been necessary for him to be privy to the murder. The plot might have been presented to him in various ways—as a fraud upon an insurance company perhaps."

"It is barely possible," Maxwell admitted. "What sort of a house was it in which your brother was supposed to have died?"

"A South Boston tenement house of an unsavory reputation—in short a resort for criminals. However, I found one honest woman in it, and she seems to have been the only one who did anything to help my brother when he was sick. What she said satisfied me. It was she who got the doctor for him; it was she who brought him food. She did not actually see him die, but she was in his room on the evening of the night when he passed away. What was done with his body?—the sealing of it in a metal-lined coffin—was by his request, and he left the money to pay for it. I have the address of the physician who attended him, and who secured the necessary permits."

"Will you give me that address?" said Maxwell.

"What do you mean to do?"

"Some one must go to Boston and investigate that story. For my own part—and I'm sorry to say it—I believe your brother to be the criminal. The plot looks simple. He pretended to die; Charlotte, who was doubtless in Boston, was lured to the house and killed."

"What's that?" cried Anna. "There at the window."

All sprang to their feet at this interruption. Ames was the first to reach the window.

"There is no one here," he said.

"I am sure I saw a man's face," said Anna in a frightened whisper. "It looked like—"

"Edward Ames," said the clergyman, as the girl hesitated.

"Yes; but I must have been mistaken. He was upon my mind, and I imagined that I saw him. Yet I am sure that some one was there. Oh, I am so frightened! This has been such a dreadful day!"

She sobbed hysterically. The three men stood with blanched faces.

"I see nothing impossible in it," said Mr. Warren. "Edward Ames was seen in Williston by Horace Riddle."

"Let me go out under the window," said Maxwell. "There may be tracks in the snow."

He turned toward the door; and then his impatience overcame him. He rushed to the window, flung it open and leaped out.

"A man has been here!" he cried. "These footprints in the light snow have been made recently. I can see nothing of him."

He climbed back into the room.

"Anna, dearest," he said, "your strength will bear no more of this. You must get to bed, and Mrs. Norton will sit by you till you go to sleep."

Mrs. Norton was the housekeeper. She was summoned, and, in spite of Anna's protest, she was made to resign herself to rest and the good old woman's care. But before they parted Maxwell bade her good-by, as for a considerable absence; indeed, he could not have spoken more tenderly if they were never to meet again.

"It is best for me to go to Boston and investigate the case there," said he. "As a physician, I shall be able to judge of the reality of Ned Ames' death, and, knowing both him and Charlotte, I can be of assistance to the Boston police, who will, of course, investigate the case. I shall drive to Holman junction to-night, in the hope of catching the express. I can do it if I start at once."

Anna strove to detain him, until she saw that her father was anxious that he should go. Then she bade him a tender farewell, and the young man went out into the winter night.

Ames remained but a few minutes after Maxwell's departure. The clergyman remained alone in his study. He had thought upon this mystery till his brain would think no more. He wheeled his great study-chair before the open fire and sat there, vainly dreaming that all these sorrows had never come upon him; that the child whose cold form lay in the room above his head was sleeping in her sister's arms that night, as pure as she.

There was a knock at the door. Thinking it was Mrs. Norton, the clergyman said: "Come in," and instantly beheld instead of the white-haired housekeeper the sturdy form of the stranger, at whose word the grave had given up its secret.

"Sit still, Mr. Warren," said he. "Don't be disturbed by my coming now by anything I may say. Who am I? Well, my name is John Mulligan, and I'm a detective from Boston. You'd like to know what I'm doing here, no doubt. I'll tell you: I'm after Eddie Ames. Now I believe him to be in this town."

"You know him to be here; that boy told you."

"As for that boy, his story don't help me much. You see the fact about that is just this: I inquired quietly for the biggest liar in town—one that would lie easily for small pay—and young Riddle was recommended; in fact, very strongly recommended. So I gave him a dollar to tell that story, and he earned the money. By Jupiter, he more than earned it. He gave me an experience, the equal of which I never had had before. For, though I suspected that Eddie Ames (alias Eddie Barker, alias a good many other names and everyone a thief's name) wasn't in that coffin. I had no more idea than you had who was in it."

"You are from Boston," said Mr. Warren. "You suspected that Edward Ames was not dead. Then you must have much important information. Dr. Maxwell should see you before he goes."

"Before he goes where?"

"To Boston, to find out how my child was brutally murdered in that wicked city, and thrust into a thief's coffin."

"We don't need to go to Boston for that," said the detective, earnestly. "It wasn't done in any wicked city; it was done right here in this town!"

All Within Professional Ethics.

Dr. F., a physician of Montpelier, was in the habit of employing a very ingenious artifice. When he came to a town where he was not known he pretended to have lost his dog, and ordered the public crier to offer, with beat of drum, a reward of twenty-five louis to whoever should bring it to him. The crier took care to mention all the titles and academic honors of the doctor, as well as his place of residence. He soon became the talk of the town. "Do you know?" says one, "that a famous physician has come here, a very clever fellow? He must be very rich, for he offers twenty-five louis for finding his dog." The dog was not found, but patients were.—London Telegraph

FUN. MUSIC AND HORSEFLESH.

Wonderful Combination Expected in Thatcher and Johnson's Minstrels.

George Thatcher and Carroll Johnson make a great team. Their new minstrel company opens in Wilmington tomorrow night, and comes to Plainfield, Monday night, Feb. 4.

One of the many features of the performance will be the novel opening first-part, a display of a costly and superb effort in scenic magnificence, beauty and elegance of costuming, the sumptuousness of which has never before been attempted in minstrelsy. The scene was especially devised for the company at a cost of $1,000, and represents a beautiful electrical palace with a grand stairway at the centre, surmounted with statues supporting many electrical chandeliers, thus making one of the grandest pictures of splendor, seldom seen on the stage.

The magnificent orchestra, composed of carefully selected musicians, is elevated upon the stairway directly behind the singing corps. The glittering ensemble of the company, comprising fifty gorgeously costumed people, will, in points of elegance, novelty and excellence, surpass anything now before the public.

Thatcher and Johnson have made this one of their strongest features, and at every performance will appear in their inimitable monologues and specialties.

The performance will conclude with the great pony circus, in which ten of the most beautiful specimens of horseflesh in the world will participate in the grand march. "Banner," the great wrestling pony, will wrestle three bouts, catch-as-catch-can, with his comical colored wrestler and trainer. "Madison Square," positively the smallest horse in existence, weighing only 45 pounds, and but 27 inches in height, will perform difficult acts.

On the afternoon of the performance, the entire company, handsomely and uniformly costumed in black coats and white silk hats of the latest and most approved style, preceded by their own band and the pony circus, will parade through the principal thoroughfares of the city, making a pleasing and attractive spectacle. The sale of seats for this engagement is now on at Music Hall.

Chinatown in Plainfield.

"A Trip to Chinatown", which comes to Music Hall tomorrow night, was written "only to amuse", and has no pretensions to plot. Several new songs have been added, all of which are tuneful and catchy.

Frank Lane, who plays the part of Welland Strong, heads the list of comedians, and promises to be as funny as his character would indicate. James Smith, the Ben Gay of the company, is just as sedate as a staid old man could be when out with the boys. Lottie Mortimer as Flirt is more captivating than ever. Georgie Bryton as Willie Grow is thoroughly up to the times for a youngster, and Sara Maddern as the gushing widow, Mrs. Guyer, is deserving of special mention.

The scenery, costumes, properties, have all been renovated since its production at the home theatre, and are carried with the company.

Prizes at Cards.

A progressive card party was enjoyed at the home of Sydney R Titsworth Monday. Whist was the game enjoyed, and after three hours of play the lucky ones were rewarded with prizes. Volney F. Green secured as first prize a silk four-in-hand scarf, having scored seven games out of a possible eleven. Arthur W. Vail received second prize, an aluminium match safe, having scored six games. Refreshments were served at 11, after which the guests returned home. Those who attended were: Arthur W. Vail, E Frank Vail, Rolland Tomlinson, Carl Pfender, Arthur J. Spicer, John Sutphen and Volney F. Green.

Christian Conference.

A conference of the superintendents of Junior Christian Endeavor Societies of Union County will be held in the parlors of the Central Baptist Church, Elizabeth, tomorrow afternoon at 2. Mrs. H. M. Maxson of this city will make an address. Mrs. Lowry, the county superintendent, and others of the junior department, are arranging for a junior rally to be held in Plainfield some time in February.

Slippery Walks.

Miss Maggie Flynn going for Dr. Boone to attend Miss Lizzie Flanagan, who had fallen on the ice, fell and had to be assisted home. Miss Flanagan was unconscious two hours, and both girls were badly shaken up. Police Sergeant Kiely's father was severely bruised by a fall at the same spot where Miss Flynn fell, on Liberty street near the parochial school.

Many stubborn and aggravating cases of rheumatism that were believed to be incurable and accepted as life legacies, have yielded to Chamberlain's Pain Balm, much to the surprise and gratification of the sufferers. One application will relieve the pain and suffering and its continued use insures an effectual cure. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

PLANTED—AN ACORN.

The Plainfield Manual Training and Grammar School, conducted by John Dalziel, in the second story of the Friends Meeting-House on East Front street, on Thursday afternoon and evening, from three until ten p. m., held its first reception. A goodly stream of friends and visitors made glad the hearts of Mr. Dalziel, of his daughter, (who teaches the clay modelling class, and who proposed and carried through to success the new enterprise of the reception) as also the hearts of his boy-pupils, each of whom stood at his table or cabinet, explaining what he had been doing. There was forestry, carpentry, drawing, clay-modelling, mineralogy, microscopy, and grammar department work to be seen, showing that the abilities and talents, the bent, of each scholar had been discerned, studied, and encouraged in expressing itself.

Added to all that was interesting to see and hear there was sprinkled in and out through the reception hours, bits of personal talk and conversation with and interesting explanations from Mr. Dalziel that formed quite as attractive a part of the programme, as any of the exhibits.

As it drew toward 9 all were seated and speechmaking was in order. After a neat little opening one from Mr. Dalziel, that was just "quite the thing", he introduced Rev. Dr. Richards, who rose and naively confessed the appropriateness of his speaking in favor of manual training, since like the occupants of the jury box who were chosen to try an important case, he knew nothing about such a school, practically. He often wished, however, that he had had so much manual training, that he could now drive a nail straight without danger to his thum , or use an axe without fear of the consequences to his foot. And what he saw of practical knowledge gained by the boys of the Manual Training School had very favorably impressed him. The Greeks, our masters in literature and art, whose influence dominated the student today and would doubtless do so through all time, thought the body of so much importance that he who was the teacher in the development of physical health, beauty, and power, stood as high in their estimation as he who taught his pupils the art of harmony, or he who led them in the foremost regions of thought. But with the Greek the soul was no factor in the problem of life, therefore came their decadence and fall. We had but one brain; and all that heart, mind, or soul knew or willed or desired, must be expressed by that one brain, through the agency of the physical body. How necessary then was it that the body should be so developed as to give the highest and most trained expression in the service of that brain.

Rev. Dr. Lewis followed with some very pleasant allusions to his own course in manual training in boyhood, first with an axe at the trunk of a tree and the reducing of that tree to a wood pile, in which course of teaching the father who knew it all, was apt to consider the rod somewhat in the light of assistant; and then in later years when he fed a threshing machine. The variation of a quarter of an inch meant possibly the loss of an arm. The ear had to be trained to a concentrated purpose of listening amid the hum of machinery, and hand and eye to the following of that indication; or life might pay the forfeit. Now in later life, writing amid the din of hotels, or the confusing calls of office or social and ministerial life, he found the benefit of that trained ear, eye and hand. The listening, the feeding, the threshing, the chopping, he was reaping now the harvest sown by them all then. "Train up a child in the way he should go", was often the quotation of his late friend Mr. Babcock, who claimed that no one should be forced into the life of an engineer, or any trade or profession, unless he showed a decided taste and bent for it, which Dr. Lewis strongly endorsed. In his opinion the Plainfield Manual Training School gave to Plainfield parents the needed opportunity to decide and to help their boys decide intelligently as to their future.

Aaron M. Powell dwelt earnestly upon the training this school gave to the spiritual part of one's being, leading the boys and girls to look upward from the work which God had made, to Him the creator of all. He drew attention to the microscope as revealing the beautiful minutia of God's works, as the telescope showed the greatness of them, while both proclaimed law, the law of God as ordering all things. He told of a morning walk with a friend, who caught a little yellow butterfly in his fingers, held it for a few moments, and then let it go apparently as well equipped for flight as before he caught it. Then his friend placed at once under a small, but powerful microscope he carried with him, some of the dust off his finger; this revealed under the enlargement of the instrument, a beautiful feather radiant with many and glorious hues. What we see here tonight, he said, marks a new era in educational methods, and I am glad that a man has been found who is willing to be the apostle and pioneer of such work in Plainfield.

Mr. Boss, principal of the North Plainfield Public School, followed Mr. Powell, but declared that he only rose to speak because he had a debt to pay. He endorsed all that the previous speakers had said, but he had a debt to pay that they had not. A friend of Mr Dalziel's had given two scholarships in the Manual Training School—one each to a scholar in a public school in Plainfield and in North Plainfield. He was bound to confess he had looked upon this somewhat in the light of an experiment, but the boy who held the North Plainfield scholarship the first year had done his full class work in that school, though taking out two hours each afternoon for Mr. Dalziel, and had done it better than the year before. Another boy held the scholarship this year, and it appeared as if the same thing was taking place in his case also. He believed that this was the "missing link" that had hitherto been left out of a boy's public school education. He hoped that some plan of union could be in time effected, by which manual training and public schools could work together, one supplementing the other, and united in the one end and aim.

With a few closing words from Mr. Dalziel of thanks all around, and of evident cheer in his hitherto up-hill road, of graceful allusion to his daughter as the wise woman who had coaxed him thus to invite the public to view his and his boys' work, the evening exhibition closed.

H. M. Maxson visited the school during the afternoon and expressed admiration of the work exhibited. Speaking of a pupil belonging to one of his schools who attended the Plainfield Manual Training School last year, he said it had been a great advantage to him, that his class work was improved and the benefit is lasting.

There was a visitors' book in which all inscribed their names; there was refreshment for the outer as well as the inner man; there was a modest bow from Miss Dalziel who could not be induced to say a word from the platform; there was courtesy and interest on the part of all the attendants in explaining to everyone; there were good nights and good wishes, and it was over.

The little seed sown a year and a half ago is bravely coming into leaf; whether it will grow into a great oak whose renown shall spread far and wide—whether like the many rooted Banyan tree its branches shall drop down and have a root-boy from every city and town in this State—all this depends on the people of Plainfield.

But the Manual Training School is no dream alone, it is a vivified fact. It is in our midst and it has come to stay. We must not lose it, for the sake of our dear boys and girls. We need it for them. The greater the number receiving instruction in the school, the lower can be put the scale of prices, and thus the wider grow its field of usefulness.

Visitors are welcomed at any hour of the afternoon by the principal, John Dalziel; and among those who registered on the Reception Day were:

Mrs L J Briggs, Mrs David W Pond, David W Pond, H M Maxson, Mrs Samuel Southern, Mrs T E Barton, Miss J Leslie, Mrs H B Lounsbury, Miss C Wardell, A D Thompson, Julia S Scribner, Edith L Gilbert, Mrs F C Harder, Mrs Wm A Pinto, Mrs Elliot T Barrows, C C Woltmann, F C Kirchoff, F Leslie Kyte, N L Rockwell, A B Clemens, Mrs Emil Woltmann, Miss Rosa M Woltmann, E Woltmann, A Woltmann, Alice M Whitney, Mrs D I Smalley, Mrs D C Ivins, F W Cornwell, M A E Wood, Minnie E Wood, Marguerite Kyte, Ethel Kyte, Lyman R Allen, Rev Dr W R Richards, Mrs LaBoyteaux, Chas E Boss, Geo E Greenleaf, Sue B Peck, Frank S Browne, Mrs F S Browne, Miss L H Everett, Mrs M E Kimball, Andrew Gavett, Cornelia A Gavett, A E Holmes, Capt Morrison, Anna C DeKlyn, Miss E P DeKlyn, Miss H N DeKlyn, A W Duxbury, Mrs Ruth C Leonard, Hervey Doane, Aaron M Powell, Anna Rice Powell, Rev Dr A H Lewis, Mrs A H. Lewis, Elizabeth W Stackhouse, A M McNaughton, E C McNaughton, P S Browne, Arthur W Thompson, C R Norman, Anna W Ticknor, W C Goss, A J Robinson, Mary E Robinson, Mrs G F Opdyke.

The room became crowded and many went away without signing names.

The Plainfield Manual Training School has no connection with the Boys Club nor other institution.

Bride and Groom from Quakertown.

A pleasant surprise was given Howard Vail and bride of Quakertown, at the home of Miss Belle Vail, East Second street, last evening. Merry games, charades, and refreshments made the hours pass most enjoyably to all present, and to the bride and groom the occasion will doubtless be remembered as one of the most notable of their honeymoon trip.

The Vail family was well represented. Among the other guests were R. Pound and wife, H. G. Adams and family, and visitors from adjacent towns.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

AT REST

Miss B. A. Smyth.

Solemn requiem mass was celebrated over the body of Miss B. A. Smyth, sister of Rev. Father Smyth of this city, in St. Peter's Church, Jersey City, yesterday morning at 10, the celebrant being Rev. Father O'Connor, Vice-General of the diocese of Newark, assisted by the Deacon, Rev. Father James Smith of Cranford, and the sub-Deacon Rev. Father Stafford, Vice-President of Seton Hall, South Orange. At the same hour in St. Mary's Church in this city, solemn requiem mass was celebrated, Rev. Father Miller officiating, in the absence of Father Murphy because of illness.

After the arrival of the body in Plainfield, the burial services were performed, Rev. Father Murphy being the celebrant, assisted by Rev. Father James Smith of Cranford as Deacon and Rev. Father Miller as sub-Deacon. Rev. Father Glennon of Asbury Park officiated as master of ceremonies.

The church was filled with friends of the departed, to witness the solemn ceremonies, among those present being Ex Commissioner Coleman of New York. Daniel Cooney, the well-known New York city iron manufacturer, and Patrick Farrelly, president of the Union News Company. Many Sisters of Charity were present, as well as friends and relatives from New York, Jersey City, and Asbury Park.

Previous to the solemn ceremonies, "Calvary" was beautifully rendered by Miss May Flannagan, soloist of St. Mary's choir, and after the absolution "Dies Irae" was sweetly sung by the choir. Rev. Father Smith of Cranford officiated at the grave.

THE GREAT CLOTHING SALE.

Watson & Co. are Making the Loss Now which the New Tariff Will Bring to All Clothing Houses.

Since Watson & Co., commenced their great closing out sale of Ulsters, Overcoats, Suits and Pantaloons, without regard to cost or value, all kind of rumors have been circulated about the firm. Some say they are going out of business, more that they need money, and other foolish stories, none of which is true. They simply have made up too many Winter garments, even for their large trade, on which they see an inevitable loss in view of the great reduction in the Tariff, which took effect on January 1, and are accepting the loss now so as to open the coming season with an entire new stock, on the low basis of values that a 50 per cent. reduction in Tariff is sure to bring unless it is offset by an increase of wages, which now seems likely.—Newark Item

Annual Meeting and Election.

The annual meeting of the Epworth League of the Monroe Avenue Chapel was held last evening in the chapel and opened with prayer by D. D. Hicks.

The reports of the various committees were read and filed. The treasurer's report showed that on Dec. 17 all bills had been paid and there was 58 cents in the treasury.

The election of officers then took place. Walter McGee, Miss Lottie Beekman and Miss Brouard composed the nominating committee, and the following was the result of the election:

President—J. J. Praed.

First Vice - President—Edwin Cook, chairman of Devotional Committee.

Secretary—Miss Lottie Beekman.

Treasurer—Frank Batson.

The committees will be appointed at the cabinet meeting of the League to be held at an early date.

The members then enjoyed a short programme consisting of violin solos by Mr Brinkerhoff, piano solos by Messrs. Higham, and recitations by Margaret Phillips. The committee in charge of Miss Lizzie Phillips then served refreshments, after which the meeting adjourned.

First Baptist C. E. Sociable.

Miss Grace Yerkes, as chairman of the social committee of Christian Endeavor society of the First Baptist Church, arranged a pleasing programme which was enjoyed by the large number of people present at the sociable last evening in the church.

At intervals during the sociability there were violin solos by Lindley Hillman, vocal solos by Wm. Holmes, and recitations by Miss May Hull. The numbers were exceedingly well rendered, and frequent encores were given. The committee then generously served refreshments to all, completing an evening of real pleasure.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

OBITUARY.

Edward Dorr McCarthy.

Edward Dorr McCarthy, who quietly passed away yesternoon in the fifty-fifth year of his age, just as the sun burst through the lowering clouds, after an illness of but ten days from pneumonia, was for years one of New York's leading jurists, a man of extensive travel, and probably one of the best Greek scholars of the United States, having accumulated a library of rare and valuable Greek works and old prints almost priceless in value.

Mr. McCarthy was born in Minasville, Montgomery County, New York. his father being the son of Capt. McCarthy who served with the Continentals from the battle of Bunker Hill to the close of the War of Independence, and his mother the sister of Ex Governor Dorr of Rhode Island. Counselor McCarthy was a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Law School in the class of '62, among his classmates being Prof. John Fisk of Harvard, D. M. Dennett, who for many years previous to his death was editor of the New York Nation, and who wrote for Horace Greeley the celebrated "Southern Letters" at the close of the war.

Mr. McCarthy in private conversation was a quiet man who gave little suggestion of his wonderful powers as an orator or his shrewdness and brilliancy as a jurist.

Some years ago he was connected with President Cleveland, who has been a lifelong personal friend of decedent, in several important railroad suits in nearly all of which he was victorious. He was many times counsel for the Cunard Line, but perhaps one of the most noted of recent cases, and one in which he had excellent opportunity to display his wonderful powers, was the celebrated Sturges-Farwell Texas tangle, involving over $1 000,000, which was tried in the courts of Chicago and London and resulted in complete victory for his clients.

He was a man of worldwide travel, having crossed to the continent no less than eighteen times, and being almost as familiar with Paris, London, Berlin, Rome the Holy Land, the Soudan, the Orient and the countries of the Nile, with all their treasures of art and science, as he was with New York city.

On his last journey, made about one year ago through Italy, the Holy Land, and the African countries of the Mediterranean and the Nile, Mrs. McCarthy accompanied him. One of his strongest possessions next to his study of Greek, was his great love for animals, and he has been observed to stand for hours watching the movements of a pet 'possum or a favorite mouse.

He was a most successful as well as a brilliant jurist, and had amassed a fortune. He was married five years ago to Miss Edith Wright, granddaughter of the celebrated late Peter Wright of Philadelphia, and his wife survives him. He had no children.

Counselor McCarthy was a man of medium stature, well built, with regularly cut features, gray hair and mustache, and an air of reserve which instantly impressed one with its quiet dignity. For years previous to his death he was senior partner of the law firm of McCarthy & Berrier of 50 Wall street, New York, which was dissolved about a year ago, Mr. McCarthy continuing.

In accordance with the express wishes of decedent, no crepe was put on the door, and no religious services will be held, the funeral Friday morning being strictly private.

The body will be cremated in Germantown, Pa.

15 MILES OF SEWERS.

Much Work to Be Done This Year in This Great Public Service.

Fifteen miles of sewers, and the disposal beds, are to be built this year in Plainfield. The resolution asking for bids will be adopted at the February meeting, and contracts will be executed as speedily as possible. It is the plan of the committee to have work on the new contracts begin May 1, though the completion of the present contract will be begun April 1. The disposal beds will be established in a locality inoffensive to Dunellen or other communities.

Compute Weight and Value.

J. F. MacDonald, the uptown grocer, always up to date, has purchased a pair of self-computing scales for weighing everything he sells. These scales tell the exact weight of the article, and at the same time compute the price of the purchase. This is the only pair in Plainfield, and will attract much attention, standing on the counter and operating in full view of the customer.

—Contractor Hummer has staked out the cellar for Mr. Blatz's prospective house which he contemplates building on Somerset street. Ground will be broken as soon as the weather permits.

—The civil service examination for letter-carriers and postal clerks, which is to be held in this city Saturday, promises more applicants than any previous examinations. Already fifteen have filed their application papers with George Godown secretary of the civil service board.

ON A CHARGE OF FRAUD.

Francis Schoonmaker Arrested in Chicago After Obtaining $2,000 from a Jeweler.

Chicago, Jan. 29—Francis Schoonmaker of Plainfield, N. J., a prominent politician, was arrested today on a charge of obtaining $2,500 from Christopher Strobel of Waterbury, Ct., on false pretenses. Schoonmaker had stumped Western States for the Republican party previous to coming to Chicago. He claims that he is a stockholder in The United Press and one or two other Eastern news associations. He obtained $2,500 from Strobel, who is a jeweler, it is alleged, on the allegation that he had a $3,300 claim against the estate of Job Male, a deceased Plainfield, N. J., millionaire.

Schoonmaker had told the people in the Chicago Beach Hotel of his alleged connection with The United Press, and said he handled the greater part of the cable news received by that organization. Schoonmaker claimed acquaintance with many prominent Eastern newspaper publishers and politicians. He was very well dressed and soon gained the favor of the guests. For the last week he had not been seen in the hotel.

[Schoonmaker's home is at 1103 Putnam avenue. He has been connected with The United Press in New York, and with other newspaper enterprises, having started as a reporter on the New York Times. He has stumped for the Republican party, and is a man of much ability as a writer and speaker. Financial difficulties have beset him, largely because of a serious illness which kept him under the constant treatment of specialists. He did hold a claim against the Male estate, on account of the cloisonne collection in the Library. It is not believed here that he has made any intentional fraudulent attempt.]

SCOTCH PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The Junior League of the Methodist Church gave a most interesting entertainment, composed of recitations, vocal and instrumental music, tableaux, etc., in the hall, Monday evening. The children all did their parts very well, for which much credit is due to Miss Emma Gibbs, who arranged the entertainment for the little ones.

Rev. J. S. Braker spent Tuesday in Camden attending the funeral of his brother, who died Saturday, Jan. 26, of erysipelas.

Miss Emma Clark of Front street is spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. Peter Smith of New Market.

Dr. Parks occupied the pulpit of the M. E. Church Sunday, owing to the illness of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Marriot.

Mrs. George A. Clark is convalescent from her recent illness.

The Choral Union will take up the sacred cantata of "Esther" Thursday evening. A full attendance is desired.

Miss Minnie Hominger entertained her cousin, Miss Balsam of New York Sunday.

Mrs. Billings of Bartle avenue is steadily improving under the excellent care of Dr. D. C. Adams of Plainfield, from a severe attack of the grip.

John Marsh has been gathering his ice crop from the lake on his property.

Push It Along.

This morning at 9:15 a loaded feed wagon drawn by a balky team belonging to the City Mills blocked the track for a few minutes right near the corner of Front and Somerset streets. Several passengers in the waiting car came out to offer suggestions and some of the crowd put a shoulder to the wheel but finally a fellow driver came up and, setting his pole against the tailboard of the loaded wagon, gave the word to his team and pushed the balky outfit way into East Front street on a run. Several who had offered assistance had to step lively to avoid being stepped on by the horses.

Quick Run of a Grocery Trotter.

Yesterday noon one of Neuman's delivery horses, exhilarated no doubt by the clear cold air and the sudden sunburst, started to run from Ninth street to the store. Nearing the corner of Sixth street and Watching avenue the wagon struck a pole and one of the hind wheels rolled off.

A few bars of soap and some sugar were spilled during this rapid transit, but no one was hurt and the damage was nominal, the wagon receiving but slight injuries aside from the loss of the wheel.

Wreck on the Central.

Eastbound fast freight No. 422, drawn by engine 412 in charge of Engineer Rodenbaugh and Conductor Transue, which is scheduled to pass here at 2:30 a. m., broke in two half a mile west of Bloomsbury, and when the sections came together five cars were derailed and thrown down the bank by the force of the collision. Fortunately no one was hurt and though traffic was delayed for several hours the wreck crew had the track clear at 6 a. m.

A Lawyer's House Burned.

Lawyer Vandeveer's house on Main street, Somerville, was partially burned by fire, Monday evening, and but for the prompt arrival of the fire department the house would have been burnt to the ground. The fire was discovered in the kitchen by passers-by. Mr. Vandeveer is well known in Plainfield, and his friends sympathize in his misfortune.

—A match is to be bowled next week Thursday between M. Sutphen's and the Hope Chapel teams, on the Hope alleys.

—Joseph Sobl, the energetic new partner in the management of Music Hall, was highly complimented last night on the clean condition of the renovated house.

THE APPEAL ALLOWED

Decision in Favor of the Manitoba Catholics.

The Privy Council Reverses the Decision of the Canadian Supreme Court in the School Question Litigation—May Cause a Dissolution of the Dominion Government.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 30.—The judgment given by the judicial committee of the privy council in favor of the appellants in the Manitoba school case against a decision of the supreme court of Canada which gives Roman Catholics in Manitoba the right to apply to the Dominion government for remedial legislation, does not in any way interfere with the constitutionality of Manitoba provincial legislation, as a committee in the previous decision had decided that the Martin act was constitutional. It is now likely that the Dominion government will at once decide upon either a session or dissolution. The probability now is that there will be a general election. It is hinted that the government will make an offer of some kind to Roman Catholics in regard to schools and this will aid them in carrying the election.

It is said that Premier Bowell could by this means secure support of the Roman Catholics and at the same time retain the support of Orangemen and ultra-Protestants. What form this offer will take is not stated but it will likely be in a way of setting apart a portion of the school funds in the province of Manitoba for separate school purposes. But there would be difficulty about this because these lands are only held by the Dominion in trust for the province, the federal power having nothing to do with the expenditures of revenue, as the matter of education is wholly within the rights of the province. Nearly all of the cabinet ministers are out of the city attending political meetings in western Ontario. Sir Charles Tupper, minister of justice, was the only one who could be seen regarding the decision. He said: "We have not avoided the Manitoba school question. We have courted it. If it had not been for Sir John Thompson's action in referring the question to the courts we would not have had to decide the question as we now have.

"We asked the courts before doing anything if we had power to interfere and we have received our answer. I decline to discuss it further, for it would not do to say, for instance, that we did not like their decision."

Hon. D. H. McMillan, provincial treasurer for Manitoba, who is at present in Toronto, said: "The decision was not unexpected. Our counsel advised us that the remarks of their lordship during the argument indicated that the repeal would be allowed. The decision does not affect us in the least. There is no way by which the Dominion government can compel the public support of separate schools in Manitoba, unless they sell the school lands they own up there and give the revenue for that purpose, then separate schools would be kept up at the expense of the country at large.

"The people of Manitoba knew what kind of a school system they wanted and any attempt on behalf of the Dominion to over-rule their wishes would be so much more time thrown away."

Hon. Clifford Sifton, attorney-general for Manitoba, who is also here said: "The decision makes no difference to us; we have established a common school system for all and will maintain it. In some quarters there is an idea abroad that the Roman Catholics of Manitoba are being unfairly treated. That is great mistake. We are treating them no worse, no better, and no different from the Protestants. At the time we abolished state separate schools, there were about 80 in existence, 30 of these have already become common schools. Nearly all would have come in by this time had it not been for this contest. They are being kept out by being told that their own school system will again be recognized. It never will. The great majority of Roman Catholics prefer our common schools because they are better than their own and they know it."

The pending school question has involved long litigation and fostered much religious animosity. The first legislature of Manitoba passed a law providing for Protestant and Catholic schools. In 1890 the government under the Greenaway administration, passed a law requiring the application of all school taxes to the support of a common school system.

The Roman Catholics refused to pay the tax and sought to test the constitutionality of the act in the courts. The courts decided against them, and the supreme court reversed the decision. The decision of the supreme court was upset by the imperial privy council, which upheld the provincial government. This virtually wiped out parochial schools in Manitoba. The Catholics petitioned for remedial legislation, but the government refused to consider the petition. They then appealed to the privy council, whose judgment, just rendered, permits the case to be reopened.

To Restore Judge Long's Pension.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Judge Bradley of the district supreme court has rendered a decision that the pension office had no right to reduce the pension of Judge Long, of the Michigan supreme court, and issued a mandamus on the commissioner of pensions directing him to restore Judge Long's pension to the original figures.

Indorsing the President.

St. Louis, Jan. 30.—The Merchants' exchange unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing President Cleveland's message to congress on the bond question and asking for an early enactment of the law covered by the message of the president.

Claims 800 Illegal Votes Cast.

Indiana, Pa., Jan. 30.—An examination of the bill of particulars, filed by Judge White, shows that Judge White claims about 800 illegal votes, cast by non-registered voters, non-taxpayers and defective affidavits.

THE GUATEMALAN TROUBLE.

Offers of Mediation by the United States Will Not Be Considered.

City of Mexico, Jan. 30.—The government still refuses to disclose the tenor of the Guatemala note. The impression prevails that it has been considered, and that Mexico has demanded instant payment of the $1,800,000 indemnity, which, if refused, will mean war. Offers of mediation by the United States government will not be considered as Guatelama has already settled the question at issue by the treaty of 1882, which she now tries to repudiate.

From 1823 until 1882 some territory was in dispute, but the treaty settled the limits once and for all. Guatemala has fifty thousand troops, with good mounted artillery, on the border of the state of Chiapas. The Guatemalans are mortgaging and turning over their coffee estates to Germans and Spaniards, so that in the event of war President Barrios cannot levy forced loans upon them. Barrios owns property in the disputed territory.

All the railways and piers on the coast in Guatemala are the property of Americans. The death of Dunn, the American, and Murphy, an Irishman, is confirmed. They were murdered and robbed by Guatemalans who crossed the international boundary.

The government has closed a large contract for the delivery of coal in Vera Cruz, and will make a similar contract for delivery at Pacific ports. The wildest rumors prevail, the latest being that President Diaz personally will take the field. Offers of assistance from the states and from private individuals still pour in.

VIGILANTS FORMING.

Ohio Farmers Will Take Active Measures Against Tramps.

Springfield, O., Jan. 30.—The wildest excitement prevails ten miles west of this place, where numerous depredations have recently been committed by tramps, and a vigilance committee of farmers is forming.

A month ago a big robbery was committed, and Saturday a man was found murdered on the railroad tracks there.

Four tramps appeared at the residence of two old maids named Morris yesterday, who live alone. The men endeavored to gain admittance by claiming to be neighbors, who had called on important business. Finding this ruse would not work, they battered the door down with a fence rail and promptly bound and gagged one of the women.

At the point of a pistol the other woman was compelled to give up a certificate of deposit for $500, two gold watches and other valuable jewelry, besides a considerable sum of money. The shock prostrated both ladies, and there is a report current that they both were criminally assaulted, but this cannot be confirmed.

CALLED ON MRS. GRANT.

Confederate Soldiers Pay Their Respects to the General's Widow.

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 30.—There was a striking scene in the parlors of the Hotel Aragon when Mrs. U. S. Grant, who had stopped over here a day en route to Florida, received a large delegation from the Fulton County Confederate Veteran association.

The old soldiers were introduced to Mrs. Grant by Gen. Clement A. Evans, one of Lee's brigadiers, and late candidate for governor of Georgia, and to each she gave a cordial hand-shake and a kindly word.

After the formal reception there was a free and easy exchange of compliments and reminiscences between the veterans and the wife of the great federal commander. Mrs. Grant left for St. Augustine last evening.

AUTOCRACY OF THE CZAR.

Nicholas II. Firmly Resolved To Retain Unlimited Power.

Berlin, Jan. 30.—Private dispatches from St. Petersburg say that the czar was called upon by delegations representing the nobility of the principal cities and many provincial and district assemblies, who congratulated him upon his recent marriage.

In replying to their congratulations the czar said he had learned that in some of the provincial assemblies voices had been raised proposing that the assemblies have a share in state affairs, and expressing other absurd desires. He therefore wished everybody to understand that he devoted all his powers to his dear country, but that he was firmly resolved, as was his dear father, to uphold the autocracy of the czar.

Justice Jackson's Condition.

Thomasville, Ga., Jan. 30.—The condition of Justice Jackson, of the supreme court of the United States, is somewhat improved. His throat troubles have left him, but the liver has become involved and dropsical symptoms have developed. The patient will leave to-day, if possible, for his home in Tennessee. Dr. T. M. McIntosh, the physician in charge, thinks there is no immediate danger.

Refused Lawyer Wright a Bath.

Boston, Jan. 30.—James Lockhart, an employe of a Turkish bath house, for refusing on Jan. 8, to allow Curtis J. Wright, a lawyer, to take a bath in the establishment, has been fined $20 in the municipal court for discriminating on account of race, color or creed. The defendant appealed to the superior court.

Royal Betrothal Denied.

London, Jan. 30.—The Daily News has been requested to deny the truth of the report that Prince Alfred, eldest son of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (Duke of Edinburgh) is betrothed to Duchess Elsa, daughter of the late Duke William of Wurtemburg. This denial is semi-official.

Appointed Vice-Chancellor.

Jersey City, Jan. 30.—Chancellor McGill has appointed John R. Emory of Newark, to succeed the late Vice-Chancellor Abram van Fleet. Mr. Emory will enter upon his new duties as soon as he can arrange his private business.

Negotiating for a Gold Loan.

London, Jan. 30.—A dispatch to the Central News says that China is negotiating for a gold loan of $15,000,000, at 6 per cent., through the Hong Kong and Shanghai bank.

WHISKEY TRUST FAILS

Receivers Appointed for the Big Corporation.

Stockholders Representing Four or Five Million Dollars Make the Application Before Judge Grosscup in Chicago—Nominal Valuation of Property $35,000,000.

Chicago, Jan. 30.—A grand coup has been sprung by President Greenhut and his friends and to-day the big organization known as the Distillers and Cattle Feeding company is in the hands of two receivers appointed by Peter B. Grosscup, judge of the United States district court.

Yesterday afternoon the receivers, E. F. Lawrence, a director of the First National bank, of Chicago, and Joseph B. Greenhut, of Peoria, filed their bonds for $300,000 each before the court and were duly qualified to act. On Mr. Greenhut's bond are Messrs. Lynch and Rothschild of the National Bank of the Republic of Chicago.

So secretly was the bill filed and the argument made that the exact time and place is not known, but it is supposed to have been heard in the judge's private chambers. Messrs. John S. Runnels and William Burry represented a large block of the whiskey trust controlled by the Greenhut following. Among the foremost names which appear in the bill are those of Wormser and Olmstead. John Stevens, of Peoria, the regular attorney of the whiskey trust, was present at the time of the argument and Levi Mayer was on hand for the opposition.

The argument was brief and resulted in the filing of the bill and appointment of two receivers. The entire action was kept secret until the filing of the bonds, so that there could be no possible slip and even in the filing the matter was postponed until after the regular hearing of the Debs trial had been concluded.

Coincident with the day's action comes the filing of the bills in the various states in which the company has transacted business. John Runnels, who engineered the entire proceeding, declines to locate the place where the bill was argued, but said:

"This action was not taken by the New York stockholders who have been threatening the organization for some time past and whose committee issued the circular a short time ago, but by the friends of the present management."

He declined to forecast the action of the receivers and the probable result, but said they would administer the property under the jurisdiction of the court and at the proper time file inventories, and if the court so decides, in the future, sell the property and pay the debts of the organization.

The property represents a nominal valuation of $35,000,000 with a present actual valuation of probably four or five million dollars.

New York, Jan. 30.—Perhaps an explanation of the hurried appointment of receivers for the whiskey trust may be found in the aggressiveness displayed by the stockholders' committee of which Richard B. Harthorne is chairman. It was ascertained last Saturday that the committee holds proxies for more than a majority of the capital stock of the company, and it was then decided to arrange, if possible, a conference with the board of directors. With this in view a telegram was sent to President Greenhut, at Chicago, informing him of the intention of the chairman and counsel of the committee to visit Peoria, the headquarters of the trust, without delay, and requesting an interview with the directors.

Mr. Greenhut replied, seeking delay, explaining that he could not communicate with the members of the board before Monday and that he would advise later. On Monday the following telegram was received:

"Chicago, Jan. 28, 1895—Richard B. Hartshorne, 9 West 51st, street, New York—Our board of directors will meet your committee Thursday morning. J. B. Greenhut, president."

Thereupon Mr. Hartshorne, accompanied by Nathan Bijur, of counsel for the committee, left New York for Peoria at once. Before they reached their destination the application for the receivership had been made.

The Decision Set Aside.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 30.—The recent decision of a commission and a jury of twenty-four men, finding Irene House Redmond, the woman of nine husbands, to be insane, has been set aside by Vice-Chancellor Bird, on the ground that the woman, who was in jail on a charge of improper relations, was not allowed to appear before the commission as she expressed a desire to do.

Death of a Prominent Society Man.

Baltimore, Jan. 30.—Mr. John Swan, the head of the Baltimore family of that name, is dead, aged 75 years. He was one of the first members of the Maryland club, and in earlier life he was well known in Washington, Philadelphia and New York society. He was never engaged in business pursuits.

RECLAIMED FROM DEATH.

The Terror of Man Thwarted,

In the Grasp of that Dread Disease, Consumption.—Life Given Back.—Almost Miraculous.

Fortunately, perhaps, the Consumptive does not realize his own condition. His is a disease of continual waste until he meets a death that is in reality one of starvation.

It is now generally conceded that this disease is incurable,—that is, by any known medicine. Change of climate, or some life-infusing food that will give new flesh, blood, and strength, and induce the various organs of the body to assume their normal functions,—this is the only hope.

The only way to do this effectually is to give the patient Bovinine, that great raw food product, the greatest concentration of the life-giving elements of raw beef known to modern science. In this connection the results obtained by Dr. J. H. Head of Atlanta, Ga., in the treatment of a case of consumption, are interesting.

Dr. Head relates briefly how a man about thirty-five years of age came to him for treatment. He had lost forty pounds in weight in six months; he suffered with a bad cough and experienced severe night sweats; he was unable to do any work; most of his family had died of consumption, and on examination his right lung was found to be seriously affected, and as the doctor remarked, "He was in a good way to have an early funeral."

But note what happened. He was given Bovinine. In two weeks he had gained seven pounds, his appetite had returned, he was able to do a good day's work, and most of the distressing symptoms had vanished; and at the time of writing the doctor felt sure of a complete cure.

This is but one of many similar cases. Bovinine will give new life and strength, make new blood and flesh, stop waste, ward off disease, and turn the current of life's river again into its natural channel. Give it one trial while there is yet hope.

PASSED BY THE HOUSE

Decisive Vote To Repeal Differential Sugar Duty.

The Financial Question in the Senate—Mr. Manderson's Compromise Measure, After Discussion, Referred to the Committee—Pooling Bill Amendment Suggested.

Washington, Jan. 30.—By the decisive vote of 239 to 31 the house at the close of an interesting session yesterday, passed the bill repealing the differential duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound imposed in the tariff bill on sugars imported from countries paying an export bounty on that article. The representatives voting against the passage of the bill were:

Democrats—Covert, Davey, Meyer, Ogden, Price and Robertson.

While the bill was in committee of the whole all amendments were voted down except one, and that was pending when the committee rose. It was offered by Mr. Dingley (rep., Me.), and provided that the repeal of the differential duty was not to be held to imply that the United States surrendered its rights under treaties to offset bounties by the imposition of equivalent differential duties whenever congress deems it desirable to enforce them. A yea and nay vote upon this amendment was had in the house, resulting: yeas, 112; nays, 156.

On this amendment the republicans and populists, with the exception of Baker, of Kansas, voted aye, and the democrats, generally no. The following democrats voted with the republicans: Barnes, Covert, Geary, Harris, Lester; Martin (Ind.); Meyer, Price and Ryan.

An amendment, offered by Mr. Hitt, to repeal the one-eighth of a cent additional duty on refined sugars was rejected by a vote of 85 to 109; and an amendment by Mr. Vanvorhis, of New York, to place all sugars and molasses on the free list was rejected, 75 to 120.

This action was taken at the request of Mr. Wilson, chairman of the committee on ways and means, in charge of the bill, who stated that the chances of its becoming a law depended entirely upon its going through the house as an independent measure in the shape in which it was reported.

In the Senate.

The financial question was brought to the front early in the session of the senate by a resolution which was offered by Mr. Manderson (rep., Neb.), and which, after discussion, was referred to the finance committee. It embraced seven propositions which Mr. Manderson admitted looked like a hodge-podge, but which really were, he said, a compromise that might be, and ought to be embodied into law. These were:

A reserve of two hundred millions in gold and two hundred millions in silver; the issue of bonds payable in gold or silver; the destruction of legal tender notes when paid in gold or silver; the exchange, for five years, when demanded, of gold coin for silver coin, and of silver coin for gold coin; the use of the new bonds for national bank currency (of not less denomination than $10); the requirement of payment of duties in gold on goods imported from countries having a gold standard and in gold or silver on goods imported from countries having a silver standard; and, finally, the free coinage of silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, and the enlarged coinage of subsidiary silver coin. Interesting remarks on this proposition and on the finance question generally, were made by Senators Manderson and Teller (rep., Col.)

Amendments to the pooling bill—which Mr. Butler (dem., S. C.) said he would call up to-day—were suggested by Mr. Chandler (rep., N. H.), looking among other things, to the preliminary submission of proposed changes of railroad rates to the interstate commerce commission. The bankruptcy bill was discussed for a couple of hours, and the commercial traveler's bill (allowing the issue of 5,000 mile mileage tickets) was passed.

Beecher were for forgery in the first and the third degree, and against Schenck in the third degree.

Premier Crispi Ill.

Rome, Jan. 30.—Premier Crispi is ill in bed with bronchitis. He is in no immediate danger.

ANOTHER BOND ISSUE.

General Belief That It Will Shortly Occur Unless Congress Acts.

New York, Jan. 30.—The continued heavy withdrawals of gold have caused the general belief that a bond issue will have to come very shortly unless congress takes quick action on the proposition of the president for an issue of three per cent. gold bonds. It was expected that the issue would be made this week, but the president decided to make one last appeal to congress for a three per cent. gold bond before sacrificing the credit of the government by the sale of four or five per cent. gold bonds.

If congress does not accomplish anything this week in the direction of the president's gold bond scheme it is understood that $100,000,000 four per cent. bonds will be issued next Monday, or at all events before the close of the week. If the scheme should be killed this week the issue may come before next Monday.

Notwithstanding the denials of August Belmont, it is believed that he will be at the head of a syndicate of foreign bankers which will take a huge block of the bonds. It is apparent that a large portion of the issue must be placed abroad if the treasury is to make any permanent gain in gold, and in no other way can an effectual halt be put upon the gold export movement.

The withdrawal of $100,000,000 from circulation will also cause an active money market, and, in this way, add to the check upon gold shipments.

SAYS THE DOCTOR IS CRUEL.

Mrs. Riegel Brings Suit for Alimony on the Ground of Desertion.

Trenton, N. J., Jan. 30.—Mrs. Mary Riegel, of Bloomsbury, N. J., has brought suit for alimony against her husband Dr. E. Lear Riegel, on the ground of desertion and cruel treatment. It was Dr. Riegel who a few days ago had an interchange of shots with William Bibbler, of Germantown, Pa., whom he accused of undue intimacy with Mrs. Riegel.

Bibbler and Mrs. Riegel are first cousins. In her complaint filed in the court of chancery, Mrs. Riegel charges the doctor with having been most cruel to her, getting violent passions, using profane language and striking her on several occasions. She also says he has threatened her life and that once he knocked their child out of her arms.

A short time ago she went to her home for a week with her husband's consent and afterward through unwarranted jealously he charged her with improper relations with Bibbler and sent word to her through her father not to return to their home as he would not permit her to live with him any more. The doctor, she says, is in receipt of an ample income and is able to properly provide for her needs.

THE JAPANESE REPELLED.

Reported Victory for the Chinese on Land and Sea.

London, Jan. 30.—The Times publishes this morning the following from its Shanghai correspondent:

"The Chinese military and naval commanders telegraph via Chee-Foo that the Japanese fleet advanced upon Wei-Hai-Wei in two divisions of nineteen ships early in the morning of the 26th. Their search-lights betrayed their presence. The guns of the Chinese fleet and shore batteries opened fire when the first division was within one thousand yards of the Chinese fleet. The fastest Chinese warships and torpedo boats dashed against the enemy and drove them off after heavy firing. The first Japanese division sailed to the northwest and the second division to the south. The Chinese claim that they damaged several ships.

"The Japanese made a simultaneous land attack from Ninghai. This was a surprise, but the Chinese repelled them. The Chinese lost twenty-seven sailors. On the Japanese side more than three hundred were killed or wounded. It is stated that several foreigners are assisting the Chinese."

Troy, N. Y., Jan. 30.—Antonio Navario, of the firm of Guiterrem & Navario, wholesale importers and exporters of Buenos Ayres, Argentine republic, is in this city with a view to arrange to buy directly of manufacturers. It is the intention to handle American goods in Argentina instead of European articles which now control that market.

The reason given is that agent's profits in the handling of American goods has been too great. Mr. Navafio will visit the principal manufacturing cities of this country.

TO ANNUL THE CHARTER

Action Against the Brooklyn Heights Company.

Legal Fight To Be Begun in Albany To-Day—Lawlessness Still Continues, but the Lines Are Making Nearly Schedule Time—Green Motormen Cause Accidents.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 30.—The strikers are playing a double game. Through counsel they have appealed to the attorney-general to move against the Brooklyn Heights company to revoke the charter for failing to operate the road. Through the agency of lawless mobs they have continued cutting wires, assaulting non-union employes, blockading tracks and otherwise preventing the cars from operating. On the one hand they invoke the law of the land; on the other they defy it even though there are three thousand troops here to aid the police in preserving order.

Were the proceedings in the courts brought by citizens acting in good faith for the benefit of the community the officers of the companies would undoubtedly be uneasy as to the results. They now treat the matter lightly and will make answer that the very men who ask the aid of the law are themselves lawbreakers whose acts have made necessary the calling out of the national guard.

The withdrawal of the 1st brigade was followed by many small disturbances. President Lewis declared with much emphasis that it was a serious mistake to withdraw the brigade. He said that he had received anonymous information that if the remaining troops are disbanded Sheol will break loose. He had a body-guard of detectives about his person, and President Norton never moves without an armed guard at his side. On the other hand, the mayor, Gen. McLeer and other officials believe that quiet is restored and turbulence at an end.

Master Workman Connelly still insists that the strikers are not beaten. There are no signs of a break in their ranks. Only a few of them have made personal application. The formal tender of their services by Mr. Connelly was a move upon which to base an application for a new writ of mandamus. This was made against the Atlantic Avenue company yesterday and was the first proceeding in court against that company. Similar steps are to follow against the Brooklyn, Queens County & Suburban.

The Brooklyn Heights company was served with formal notice in the mandamus proceedings against them. They have twenty days to answer. They have also to appear before the attorney-general at Albany to-day in the application for action looking to the forfeiture of their charter. In addition to this warrants are to be applied for before Justice Tighe for the arrest of the officers of the line for violating the ten-hour law.

One motorman has made affidavit that he was forced to work eleven hours and six minutes for the company. Violation of the ten-hour law is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of $500 for each offense, or imprisonment for three months. There are 1,600 employes who threaten to bring action. Still further proceedings which are on the programme are suits by each ex-employe for one week's salary, and suits for damages by merchants whose business has been prostrated.

While the strikers are pulling all these strings to give trouble to the companies and force them to surrender, There are many other complications.

The board of aldermen are seeking for some means of demolishing the companies, the labor organizations have decided not to ride in their cars, the grand jury is looking into the loss of life and limb due to violations of the laws regulating speed of cars, the board of arbitration has gone to Albany to report upon the causes of the strike, and a new committee from the legislature is on its way to investigate the whole matter. All in all the lot of the trolley magnate is not a happy one.

The companies made a good showing in the number of cars run and lines operated yesterday. They have shown that all they need is time to engage and break in new men, and protection for the men and property of the roads. Snow and cut wires in the early morning gave them some trouble but by noon about two-thirds of the number of cars operated previous to the strike were in operation. Cars ran close to schedule time all day and later at night than has been attempted in two weeks.

Only once yesterday was the troops called out. At about 3 p. m., a gang of men placed a wagon on the track of the Fifth avenue line, at Twenty-first street, and mobbed the crew of the first car which arrived. The policeman on the front platform was powerless. He whistled for help, however, and another officer notified the 23d regiment boys at the stables of the line at Twenty-third street. The militiamen rushed to the rescue at double-quick. The mob scattered in all directions. Lewis Grim, one of the men in the crowd, who attempted to remove the lever used by the motorman to turn on the current, was arrested and locked up.

There were many accidents due to the inexperience of motormen.

Car No. 902, of the Third avenue line, had a lively experience at Seventh street and Third avenue last evening. It was attacked by a mob of several hundred persons. Volleys of stones broke the car windows and damaged the front of the car. Special Officer Smith, who was at the front of the car, was hit on the head by a brick and knocked down. In addition he was kicked and clubbed, but finally escaped. The police finally dispersed the mob and the car was taken to the stables.

Both the Brooklyn Heights and Atlantic avenue companies ran cars till midnight. No serious interference was reported.

It is stated that Justice Gaynor has been asked by the board of mediation and arbitration to state in writing what in his judgment was the cause of the strike and report the same to the board.

Vanity

is a virtuous vice. The world is better for it. It makes men ambitious—and it makes women careful of their personal appearance. It doesn't take much money to keep well-dressed now-a-days. Cleaning or dyeing makes it possible to use soiled or faded garments. And there's where our ax comes in. We are in the Cleaning and Dyeing business. Our cleaner is ready, and our dyer has his fall shades mixed.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 30, 1895

Leader of the Legion.

Jan. 30, 1863, was the date of a spirited fight between the Confederates of General Roger A. Pryor's command and Corcoran's Irish Legion. The scene was near Suffolk, Va., where the gallant Corcoran went in search of more fighting adventures after his narrow escape from death as hostage in Libby prison. The fame of his valorous exploits with the old Sixty-ninth at Bull Run and of his noble bearing under sentence of death called to his standard a new legion, among others a militia regiment bearing the number of the Volunteer Sixty-ninth.

Pryor's troops, with 12 cannon in their train, marched past the camp of the Legion on a foraging raid, and Corcoran went out to spoil their fun. Three times Pryor's men charged upon the Irish skirmishers, finally bringing their 12 guns into play. There were also 12 guns with the Legion, supported by the Sixty-ninth. The artillery took position, 12 pieces on a side, and for over two hours kept up a furious duel. The Confederate firing was unusually savage. In both Union batteries the gunners fell by the score, the shells likewise tearing through the ranks of the Legion behind the pieces, with awful execution. Finding the shots running low in the artillery chests, Corcoran led his infantry forward, but the enemy wouldn't stand for close combat, although the Legion and a squadron of cavalry with two sections of fresh artillery harassed their march for miles. Corcoran fought in defense of Suffolk when Longstreet laid seige with an army some weeks later, and soon after that his career ended by an accidental death at the camp of Meagher's Irish brigade in the Army of the Potomac.

REMOVAL.
Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to
NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.
(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.
Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.
TO THE PUBLIC:
From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.
We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.
Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.
EDWARD TEEL, JR.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.
I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.
I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.
I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon.
JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.
PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.
TO THE PUBLIC:
For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly; they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.
THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R. VanZandt,
Plainfield, N. J.
I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr J. V. Z Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

'RAH FOR THE BOYS.

Details of Equipment and Methods Prepared at the Instances of the G. A. R. and Committees of Public School Teachers.

Having got the American flag raised over nearly every schoolhouse in this country, the G. A. R. is at work with enthusiasm and determination to build up beneath those flags something which shall sustain them in all stress, under all circumstances, and against all opposition. They propose to create this sustaining force through military instruction in the schools.

At the last annual encampment of the Grand Army held in Pittsburg, the question of military instruction in the public schools was discussed, and Gen. George W. Wingate was appointed a "special aide to the Commander-in-chief in charge of military instruction in schools." At the request of several committees representing teachers in different cities he has prepared some suggestions as to the method to be persued. It would be best, he thinks, for the principals to devise a system.

If a plan has been decided upon, General Wingate says, the boys should be carefully measured in order to establish the extent of their physical improvement. The instruction should consist of:

The setting-up drill, facing and salutes marching by squads, manual of arms, regular drill by company and battalion. All scholars, including girls, should be drilled in the first three for fifteen minutes each day. Care should be taken by the teachers to see that the movements are performed with smartness and exactly as prescribed. Their value, both physical and mental, consists largely in snap and precision. Every boy should be required to salute all teachers whenever meeting or addressing them, and the teachers should be equally careful to return the salutes. This teaches self-respect and subordination to lawful authority.

Boys over 11, and who are at least 4 ft. 6 ins. tall, and whose parents do not object, should be drilled regularly in the manual of arms and by company and battalion two hours a week, outside school hours, great care being taken not to overtax the strength of the boys.

The drill should be regarded as a privilege. Faults should be punished by the deprivation of certain insignia, which may be adopted by the school, and a loss of membership in the battalion for a month. Discipline should be quiet but firm. Everything possible should be done to inculcate a military bearing, which involves an upright carriage, neatness in dress, attention, silence, and the utmost promptness in rendering strict obedience to all orders, whether from the instructors or the cadet officers. It should also be impressed upon the boys that absolute truthfulness, a high regard for personal honor, and an aversion to anything dishonest or tyrannical are expected of the citizen soldier—that they must be soldiers and gentlemen.

The boys should be divided into companies not exceeding forty or fifty strong as a larger number is difficult to handle. Each should have the usual number of officers and non-commissioned officers. The officers and non-commissioned officers of the companies and battalions should be selected from the boys showing good scholarship combined with proficiency in military matters, and manly bearings and characteristics. Warrants should be given to them by the Board of Education at the close of their term of service. A school for officers should be established.

In time the officers can put the battalion through the drill, but at the beginning an instructor is necessary. Properly there should be paid instructors who will devote their time to the matter. One of these can look after about six schools. It is hoped that the services of army officers can be soon had for this purpose in large cities. If the drills can be had in the morning or in the evening, it will be easy to procure sufficient volunteer instructors from the National Guard.

The question of uniforms should be left to each school. A cap alone is sufficient to begin with, and costs but little. In most cases it will be found that a plain uniform costs no more than ordinary clothes, and lasts longer, as the boys take better care of it. Ordinarily a cap and blouse will be sufficient, which may be worn by the boys at all times. A white webbing waist belt and plate adds very materially to the soldierly appearance where a dark blue blouse is used, and is inexpensive. Swords and belts for the officers should be provided by the authorities and belong to the school. The uniforms used in Brooklyn Grammar School No. 15 cost $6, and the cap 50 cents additional.

Grammar School No. 15 of Brooklyn has an organized battalion of 224 boys, commanded by Principel Wm. F. Feiter, and divided into four companies. The battalion is limited to boys 4 feet 6 inches tall, which practically takes in those over eleven, who are in good health, who will uniform themselves, and who have a prescribed standing in their school work. The uniform is of blue cloth, with yellow stripes on the sides of the trousers. The cap has in front A. G. I. in a circle. All uniforms are alike, the cadet officers having their rank indicated by stripes on their sleeves.

Under our system of government we will never have a large standing army, and our strength and safety are in a general dissemination of military knowledge and training among the people. What the man and citizen ought to know in order to the full discharge of his duty to his country should be imparted to the boy. Nothing will so much aid to enlarge our State militia, and to give it efficiency and character, as the plan proposed. The military taste and training acquired in the school will carry our best young men into the militia organizations, and make those organizations reliable conservators of public order, and ready and competent defenders of the national honor."

Human Nature.

It is related that a certain man was recently very sad because his wife had gone on a visit, which she would not shorten in spite of his appeals to come home. He finally hit upon a plan to induce her to return. He sent her a copy of each of the local papers with one item clipped out, and when she wrote to find out what it was he had clipped from the papers he refused to tell her. The scheme worked admirably. In less than a week she was home to find out what it was that had been going on that her husband did not want her to know about.—Tit-Bits.

A WAR PRISON SHYLOCK.

Operations of a Money Lender Among Union Prisoners.

"Whenever I see a steamer approach the Pacific wharf out there," said a former officer in an Iowa regiment, now an inmate of the Soldier's Home at Santa Monica. "I recollect an incident of the war. I was one of 600 prisoners sent from Macon to Charleston, 1864. Not one of us were injured during our stay.

"But all of them got hard up for money. When they were in Richmond, in Libby prison, communication with the North was comparatively easy to those who had friends willing and able to send provisions and money. In Charleston it was very different. The prison fare was very poor, and the medical attendance was as bad as could be. In the cradle of secession the people seemed to be very poor. Before we had been there very long the money even of the richest of the prisoners was gone. There were many among us who were the sons, brothers, or near relatives of those in the North, who had plenty of money, but they were cut off from communication with us. Many people in the North sent gold to friends in prison, but it never reached us.

"There then appeared among us a new prisoner. He was, he said, a Union officer from a New York regiment. He had very little of the soldier about him. He rather reminded you of a whiskey drummer or a Chatham street clothing dealer. But he had a charm. He had money to lend—Confederate money. The money would not buy much, but it would buy something. A dollar in gold could be sold for about $20 in this currency outside the prison. We did not have any gold, but he did not demand gold. He lent his Confederate money for Northern drafts at double the rate of gold in the Charleston market. That is, he would give you $1,000 in Confederate money for a draft of $100 on a father, brother, wife or son in any of the great Northern cities. He said he would take the risk of collecting the drafts, and plumed himself on his generosity. He soon had customers and did a fine business. From officers he took notes endorsed by other officers. For these he charged at the rate of $500 in Confederate money for a note of $100—four times the rate for gold in the Charleston market.

"These operations occupied about six weeks. Altogether the man had secured drafts to the amount of $50,000 in gold, for every draft stipulated that it was to be paid in gold. Gold was then at a big premium in the North, so that drafts for $100 would be worth $150 or perhaps $200 in the North, if it were paid in gold. The speculator intended to make money both ways. If he could collect all he would have from $75,000 to $100,000 in greenbacks for his drafts.

"One day two Union officers were exchanged by the flag of truce in the harbor. One of the lucky fellows was the money lender. The other was a cavalry officer who had been a prisoner for many months. The latter had long watched the performance of the money lender and had resisted all inducements to borrow. The two went out of the harbor together and were received on board the Cosmopolitan by Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, the Adjutant-General of the Department of the South.

"The money lender and the cavalry officer had occupied the same stateroom on their northern voyage. During the vogage, the money lender became confidential, and the cavalry officer became convinced that he had never been an officer in the Union Army, but that he was simply put in the prison at Charleston to "work" the prisoners for the Shylocks of that city.

"As the Arago steamed up the bay toward the dock at Fortress Monroe, the money lender pulled from under the mattress a satchel. This was his only baggage. The cavalry officer had only the clothes on his back, and those he had borrowed from Gen. Woodford. The two were on deck. The money lender pushed his way eagerly to the forward deck and stood by the captain. Near him stood the cavalry officer admid the crowd of passengers who were watching the shores and participating in the excitement of a landing after a three days' sea voyage. Some incident of the occasion produced a sudden rush to the vessel's side. In that instant the money lender let go his grip on the satchel. Quick as thought it was seized by another hand and quietly dropped into the waters of the Chesapeake Bay.

"No one saw it done, for it was dropped on the side of the ship where none was looking. The cavalry officer was calmly leaning over the starboard rail contemplating the beautiful expanse of Hampton Roads, apparently caring nothing for the stir and clamor of the landing. The money lender exclaimed at his loss, and offered a reward for the return of the satchel and its contents. No one could offer him any comfort. He went down to the pier a very sad man, and no one seemed to sympathize so deeply with him as his comrade of the Second Cavalry.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

NOW ON HAND,

Diphtheria Antitoxine.

FOR IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

So limited has been the supply of GENUINE ANTITOXINE heretofore, that sales have been made only on condition of immediate actual use. But amid so large a population as ours, an urgent demand for the new treatment may arise at any hour, night or day, Sunday or week-day. And delay in obtaining it might result fatally. I have therefore, with some difficulty, and at considerable expense, provided a complete outfit of Antitoxine Serum (with injector) and am prepared to meet such demand. The cost of an outfit (serum of two powers and Koch injector) is now about $12 being only one-fourth of the earlier price. At present sales will be made only on the order of a practicing physician.

DRAMA AND OPERA.

ONCE THE MOST FAVORED OF ACTRESSES; IN POVERTY NOW.

Pauline Markham Who Fascinated New York Audiences 20 Years Ago, Tells of the Gifts That Were Lavished Upon Her, and of Her Needs To-Day.

Reference was made recently in these columns to Pauline Markham once a theatrical sensation in New York, but now a beneficiary of professional friends. The wonderful popularity of Miss Markham at the time the "Black Crook" was in its zenith, nearly twenty years ago and her present status can best be compared by extracts from a recent newspaper article by the lady herself. In it Miss Markham says: "When I was in my prime and enjoying all the fruits of success upon the stage, Richard Grant White said of me that I had a voice of vocal velvet and the lost arms of the Venus de Milo. Within a few days this phrase was on every body's lips. It was printed in every paper and it went from one end of the country to to the other. Looking back upon these times now, when every day I enjoyed all the luxuries which money could purchase and the devotion of hosts of friends and every night received the adulation of the public, applause, flowers, and every new mark of popularity, I cannot but reflect upon the strange vicissitudes of the stage career and conclude that the moral of my wasted opportunities is, "Provide for your future in the days of you prosperity." At Niblo's, in the height of my of popularity, I have stood knee-deep in flowers. Night after night bouquets by hundreds were thrown upon the stage for me. I had beautiful apartments in East Fifteenth street, and I had them quite filled up with flowers thrown to me the previous night. The largest bouquet I ever heard of was given me one night. It was seven feet in height, and it contained a diamond cross, which was one of the most beautiful presents I ever received. Diamonds I received by the score. From Tiffany's alone I was told $30,000 worth of diamonds were purchased as presents for me at different times. One night upon the stage I wore all my gems, and they were so numerous that they impeded my movements. This was in the "Black Crook." While I had a very handsome figure I was not beautiful, yet soon the town was full of my praises, and Richard Grant White topped it off with the saying I have quoted, which appeared in an article by him in the Galaxy.

Yet all this was delightful. Such adulation and applause must produce a kind of intoxication in any one, as a result of which the ordinary rules of prudence are apt to be forgotten, for one cannot realize that such a good fortune as this will not last forever.

The popular actress in the crowning triumphs of her success receives enough of flattery and ovation to turn the head of any one. What appears to be boundless wealth is at her disposal. There is thus no inducement for her to save money against the future. She squanders it right and left on everything that is beautiful and attractive.

I did this. I was no doubt extravagant and spent thousands of dollars which I ought to have saved. But I had always been accustomed to living well, and, feeling that I had made a success, I thought that my name and my abilities would carry me on for many years.

Now that I am the victim of misfortune and in need of money, I do not waste many regrets over these follies, but I cannot help but think of them at times.

I had a very great success upon the stage, and this was continued over a long number of years. No doubt $250,000 have been earned by me, but now I have nothing to show for it.

It must not be thought, however, that I wasted all this money or even spent it. A large part of it was lost in business by my husband, and the rest was used in paying our expenses.

The diamonds have all gone. To the young woman who is stage-struck as it is called, and who wishes to enter professional life, no matter what may be her talents and capacities, I can only say, "Don't." The stage life has many attractions for women that no other walk of life possesses. No doubt success upon the stage brings with it extreme gratifications.

RELICS CURED HIM.

A Metropolitan Policeman Suddenly Lost All His Physical Ailments.

"Glory be to God! I have been cured by His divine intervention, where all the doctors have failed to relieve me," said Policeman Michael Griffin lately. Griffin wears five blue stripes on the sleeves of his uniform, showing that he has served more than a quarter of a century on the metropolitan police force. His number is 85, and he has been attached for several years to the Ordinance Department. After his health had been shattered by disease and exposure, he was transferred from active patrol duty to the comparative quiet of the courts.

Many of the members of St. Francis Xavier's Church, in West Sixteenth street, planned a pilgrimage to Auriesville, Montgomery county, last August, and Griffin arranged to take his vacation at the time, so as to join the other pilgrims at the shrine of the Mother of Martyrs, to worship with them on Lady's Day and to remain for a week.

The shrine marks the spot where Father Isaac Jogues, a missionary priest, was slain by Indians more than two hundred years ago. His associate, Rene Goupil, a scholastic, was murdered at the same time near by, and tradition has it that his remains were covered by a huge bowlder. In any event the body was never found, but pilgrims have long assumed that a rock weighing three or four tons in a ravine not more than five minutes' walk from the hill had been rolled over him. A little stream passes through the ravine when the winter snows thaw, but dries during the warm weather.

The rock is probably three feet high and rounded on the sides; the flat surface looks as though it had once been the base, but had been overturned by some giant force.

Father Jogues' piety and good deeds gained him wide fame, and one of the Indian maidens whom he converted, and who subsequently suffered martyrdom, is, it is said, to be canonized. Pilgrims have been going to the shrine for several years, but never were there as many as last summer. Griffin estimates that on August 15 there were 1,000 from Amsterdam, N. Y., 800 from Albany and Troy, and probably 1,000 others from different points in this State and Pennsylvania. There were impressive ceremonies, including a procession of pilgrims up the Hill of Prayer to the shrine, and touching sermons, glorifying the martyrs.

After the services the pilgrims scattered, and many of them broke off pieces of the rock under which Rene Goupil's body was said to have been crushed. Griffin kept part of the stone he had brought to the city. He recently heard that one of the pilgrims who had been a cripple had been wholly cured, and he determined to test the efficacy of the stone in his own case. He crushed a portion of it in holy water from St. Ignatius' about a month ago and applied it that night to an open wound, praying to God to help him in his affliction.

The sore miraculously disappeared and Griffin became more robust than he had been for many years. His aches and pains were gone, and he recovered the light step and heart of his youth. He determined to test the efficacy of the stone on another sufferer. His landlady, Mrs. McDonald, of No. 129 West Sixteenth street, was afflicted with many of the ills brought by old age. She had become blind, and pains racked her limbs. Her worst trouble consisted of cramps or spasms in her legs at night, that made sleep impossible.

Griffin told Mrs. McDonald what the relic had done for him, gave her some of the powdered stone in holy water, and when the pain attacked her, her daughters rubbed her legs with the marvel working preparation. She was immediately quieted and she fell into a peaceful slumber, and since then she has had no cause to complain of any ache.

"She is very, very old," said Griffin. "I should say she is from seventy-five to eighty years old, and she has long been entirely confined to her house, but she now hopes to soon be able to go to St. Francis Xaviers' Church, that she used to attend regularly. She hesitated about publicly proclaiming the miracle that God had seen fit in His mercy to perform in her case, but I urged her to have the facts inscribed in the list resulting from our pilgrimage.—N. Y. Herald.

A Chaplain Denounces State Camp Life.

In an interview published in the Hartford Post recently the Rev. Henry H. Kelsey, pastor of the Fourth Church, Dr. Horace Bushnell's old pastorate, one of the oldest churches in Connecticut, confirms the statements made regarding dissipation at Camp Bradley, Niantic, last August. Dr. Kelsey is chaplain of the First Regiment, C. N. G. He says:

"The State pays the members of the National Guard to go into a military school once a year and not to go on a week's bum."

He declares that he has seen the debauchery of camp life and the orgies, and has noted their effect upon the men, and that the State camps as they have been conducted are an abomination and a disgrace to the State.

On the subject of reforming the Guard, he says that he would begin at the top with the Governor's staff and not have them in camp at all. He is in favor of regimental encampments. The colonels would then have more direct control over their men. He would have officers set the men an example by reducing their consumption of liquor, which he says is now enormous. He thinks that most of the inefficiency in camp is due to the familiarity between officers and men.

He would abolish all excursions of citizens to camp, which makes it a scene of revelry and gives it the appearance of a fair instead of a military camp. Mr. Kelsey favors a legislative investigation, and says that all assertions regarding drinking, revelry and dissipation at camps of the National Guard can be fully proved by indisputable testimony.

President Lincoln was exceedingly strict in keeping faith with his children, and required the same fidelity in others. At one time a visitor at the White House persuaded little Tad to sit on his knee by promising as a reward the charm on his watch chain. Shortly after, as the man was about to dismiss the child with no further thought of the lightly spoken promise, the President said, sternly, "Give him the charm, sir!" In confusion, the man obeyed the bidding.

HOW HE FOUGHT.

Bob Stark leaned against an abandoned cannon and would have shed real tears had he not felt that it was unbecoming to one who was eighteen and a soldier to cry. But this was the unhappiest moment of Bob's life. He did not see how anybody could be more unfortunate and miserable than he. To serve two years, to be in a dozen battles, to be half frozen at times and half starved at other times, to go without pay and in rags, to endure all these things, and then, when the most critical and most interesting period of all came, when the great movement of the war, the movement that was to make them or break them, was in progress, to be left behind by the army was more than Bob could stand. It seemed that fate had selected him as its bright, particular victim. Confound that troublesome wound, anyway! Just at that moment he felt as if it would be a great pleasure to him to send a rifle ball through the Hessian who had given him the nasty bayonet stab in the shoulder. Besides, he thought he ought to have received more consideration from his Colonel. He was sure he could have kept up with the army. The wound in his shoulder was partially healed, and it would have been entirely well in a week. His comrades would have helped him on the march, and when the time for fighting came, Bob felt that he could be ready to do as good service as the next man.

"No, you cannot go," said the Colonel, "for the orders of the Commander-in-chief are the strictest. 'We must take no wounded—nobody who might by any chance embarrass our march, no matter how little.' That's the way his instructions read, and Bob, my boy, I guess he's right."

The Colonel's words were kind, but they were poor consolation to a boy of eighteen who loved adventure and a soldier's life and had seen the troops—the American and French marching off together, full of enthusiasm and hope, uniforms brushed up and bayonets shining. He knew where they were going. The secret had been kept well, but it could not be kept until the last moment. Bob knew, just as those who had left him behind him knew, just as everybody knew except the sleeping redcoats down in the city, that they were bound for Virginia, and Bob felt as if all his soldier life were wasted since he was not to be in at the trapping of Cornwallis.

Bob looked around at the deserted camp. Everywhere were traces of the occupation of men, but the men themselves had departed. Even the camp followers and the slightest wounded who were left behind to keep the fires burning and to deceive the enemy were now gone. Bob was alone.

A half-dozen cannon which overlooked the river and had often exchanged shots with the enemy's war vessels were abandoned there. "Too heavy to carry," said the officer tersely. "Mustn't embarrass the army on the march. Leave 'em here. Maybe we'll claim 'em again some day."

"Well, old fellow, there's nobody but you and me left," said Bob, as he rubbed his face against the cold muzzle of one of the cannon. "We're no good any longer. Here we are stuck on this river's bank, and the army don't care for us any longer. Old metal thrown aside; no use—that's all we are."

Bob was still thinking when he saw a black speck far down on the river. Then another and another speck appeared, until he counted seven in all.

The specks grew larger and took shape. "Ships!" said Bob to himself. This was not a very original remark, but ships on that part of the Hudson attracted attention then. They were sure to be British, and warships at that.

"I'll just see what they're up to," said Bob, continuing his conversation with himself. "Perhaps they've found out the army has gone and have come to take possession."

Bob took another look at the camp. Though deserted, no one would be able to see that fact from the river. The embankments on the cliff were as solid and as formidable in appearance as ever. Through the embrasures the mouths of the big cannon looked dark and frowning.

The ships came on until they were just outside the range of the big cannon. There they halted, the Union Jack of England flaring from the topmast of every one of them. Bob could plainly see the officers in gold lace on their decks. Some of them were examining the fortifications through their glasses.

"Mighty little they'll see from the middle of the river out there," thought Bob. They'll not find out that the army has gone until they open fire on the camp and receive no shots in return."

Bob's heart sank and his breath grew short. Why had those ships come prowling so unexpectedly up the Hudson?

Bob did not show any excitement. He took a look at his six big cannon, which had been left loaded and primed. Then he peeped out at the ships. There were three frigates and four sloops. The officers on the decks were still staring hard through their glasses at the cliffs.

Presently men began to launch a boat from the nearest ship. Six sailors and an officer got into the boat. A little white flag was hoisted in the stern, and then the sailors began to row vigorously towards the camp.

The boat came within two hundred yards of the camp. Then the sailors rested on their oars and the officer stood up and waved the white flag.

"What must I do! What must I do!" thought poor Bob. The officer seemed to grow impatient. Bob was all in a tremor. The officer might come on and discover the camp was abandoned.

But Bob steadied himself and hesitated no longer. He knew what to do now. There were plenty of small boats at the foot of the cliff, abandoned there by the army.

He ran down a path, jumped into one of the boats and began to row towards the boat waiting in the stream.

Bob rowed up close to the British boat, then stopped, sitting up straight and looking as dignified as he could.

"I am Capt. Barrington, of His Majesty's frigate Arethusa. I have a communication for your commander, as I presume you are from the American camp," said the officer, haughtily.

"Gen. Washington sent me to see what you wanted," said Bob, quietly.

"Bah! you are but a boy, and you are not an officer cannot deliver an important message to such as you," said Capt. Barrington, sneeringly.

Bob's face flushed. Then he said firmly:

"My orders were to come and meet you and see what you wanted. I do not think the General will send any one else."

"Cursedly impertinent these rebels are becoming!" muttered the officer, savagely, but loud enough for the boy to hear.

Bob said not a word, but let his oar play idly in the shining waters of the Hudson while he waited.

The officer stared up at the cliff. Then he bit his mustache and said, snarlingly:

"I must deliver my message to an officer of rank. You are no fit messenger to send to a Captain in His Majesty's service. I shall go nearer and wait till a proper person comes to meet me."

"I would advise you not to do so," said Bob, quietly, "because if you go any nearer they'll sink you with a cannon."

The officer hesitated. Then he said, with an imprecation:

"It's contrary to all military rules to give an important message from one commander-in-chief to another commander-in-chief to such as you. But as the Americans are not gentlemen, anyway, I suppose we must not expect much from them. Here, take this letter from Sir Henry Clinton to Washington."

"It shall be delivered to Gen. Washington at once," said Bob, with an emphasis on the "general," "and let me repeat my advice to remain where you are, because if you come too close they may think you are trying to study the fortifications and fire on you."

"I don't want any advice from you, young sir," said Capt. Barrington, fiercely. "It is sufficient for you to deliver that message."

But his boat remained stationary in the stream.

Bob pulled to the shore with a steady stroke, though his heart was beating hard. He tied his boat to the bank and walked deliberately up the path that led to the top of the cliff. When he had passed out of sight behind the earthworks he sat down beside a cannon and read the letter. It was sealed with a big red seal and addressed in a big round hand to the "Leader of the American Forces."

Bob unfolded the letter and read it. It was a proposition from Sir Henry Clinton for an exchange of prisoners.

Bob was in a quandary again. Capt. Barrington would expect a written answer to that, and he had nothing with which to write an answer, even if with the proper materials he could have prepared one that would pass muster.

Bob peeped through the embrasure. Capt. Barrington was sitting stiff and straight in his boat and staring at the cliff.

"Well," soliloquised Bob, "I must give Gen. Washington sufficient time to consider this important proposition, and in the meanwhile I'll be thinking what to do."

So Bob sat beside the cannon for a full three-quarters of an hour. Then he turned and walked slowly down the cliff to his boat.

When Bob rowed up alongside of Capt. Barrington, the latter inquired, savagely:

"What! has he sent you back again, boy? This looks like an intentional insult to one of His Majesty's officers and to Sir Henry Clinton himself.

And the Captain looked suspiciously up at the cliff, where the muzzles of the cannon frowned down upon him.

"Gen. Washington directs me to say to you, began Bob, "that he——"

"What! has he sent no formal reply?" broke in Capt. Barrington. "This is most insulting. How dare he send a verbal message, and by such a boy as you, in reply to a written and most important communication from the Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's forces in America? Bah! Confound the impertinence of these rebels!"

Bob said nothing, and again let his oar play idly in the shining waters of the Hudson, while the Captain's wrath boiled and seethed.

"How do I know that what you will tell me is the truth or not?" at length asked the Captain.

Bob made no reply.

"There is something suspicious about this," cried the Captain. "They are strangely quiet on that cliff up there. I mean to go nearer and see if your commander will not send me a more responsible messenger than you are."

"Better not," replied Bob, with an impassive face. "I heard some of the officers say you were too near already. If you approach the cliff they'll be sure to sink you. Your boat would make a mighty fine target for one of those guns up there."

The Captain hesitated again, looking up at the guns as if measuring the distance between them and his boat. The sailors leaned on their oars, apparently uninterested in the conversation.

"Well, what is it they told you to say?" asked the Captain at last.

"Gen. Washington directed me to say to you," said Bob, "that he wished for time to consider Sir Henry Clinton's message, and that in a few days he will send an answer to it by a messenger, under cover of a white flag, to New York."

"I suppose I must take the message," growled Capt. Barrington, more to himself than to Bob. "But it is a most undignified and preposterous way of doing things. Officially, I know nothing of the contents of Sir Henry Clinton's letter, and yet I must take back a verbal answer to him.

"Very well," he now said, directly to Bob, "I will take the message, but it is the last time I will ever come to the Americans on such business if I can help it. So, you young rebel, you may know from that my opinion of you and your kind. And you can tell your commander, also, that, in view of the great discourtesy offered to me, I shall consider my mission closed when I reach my ship. As soon as I put my foot on the deck we feel at liberty to open fire upon you, if we wish to do so."

"Oh, don't trouble yourself about that," said Bob. "The men are wishing for a little excitement anyway, and I dare say they would enjoy sinking one of your fine frigates out there."

The Captain snarled again, and then gave the command for his men to pull away. As they returned to the ship Bob rowed back to the cliff as fast as he could, and soon was safe behind the earthworks.

Presently the ships moved up a little closer, Capt. Barrington's vessel, the Arethusa, still in front. There was much bustle and stir on their decks. The Arethusa swung around a little. There was a flash of fire, a gust of white smoke, a deep retort that rolled and echoed far up the Hudson and through the hills, and an eighteen-pound solid shot struck the soft earth of the embankment in front of Bob, and imbedded itself there.

Bob was about to be bombarded.

In a moment there was another flash and roar, and then when the smoke cleared away Bob could see the officers again examining the earthworks with their glasses.

Now, there had been worse gunners in the army than Bob. With a youth's natural curiosity he had picked up such knowledge, though attached to a different arm of the surface. He sighted one of the big cannon at the Arethusa and fired it.

The ball clipped through the frigate's spars and rigging, and considerable confusion on the ship's decks followed. One man seemed to be wounded.

"I wouldn't be sorry if that was Capt. Barrington himself," thought Bob.

The other ships were now moving up, and directly there was a tremendous crash like the striking of a thunderbolt in the mountains, and a whole broadside was discharged from the ships at the earthworks. Dirt flew about like sand in a storm, and Bob crouched very low until the whirlwind was over.

"I guess I must answer all that how-d'ye-do," said Bob to himself, and he sighted and fired two cannon within half a half minute of each other. The first ball skipped along the water between two of the ships and ricochetted against the opposite shore, but the second smashed into the side of one of the frigates. There was a great tumult on the stricken ship, and Bob could see the officers running about and apparently giving orders.

"I'll give 'em more, just to keep up the excitement," thought Bob, and he fired another shot which was lucky enough to go plump into the same ship.

The damaged ship dropped back behind her sister vessels and the latter opened a cannonade which made a mighty noise but did no damage, for the earthworks were impervious. Bob had only four loaded cannon left, but he gave them the contents of two of these. There was so much smoke he could not tell whether either of his balls struck, but presently the ships fell back, halted until they could fire another volley all around, and then started down the river. Bob gave them his remaining two shots as they went, and a little later, under full sail for New York, they passed out of sight.

A few days afterward a countryman gave Bob a copy of a little paper that the British officers published once a week in New York, and his eye alighted on this paragraph:

"Hearing that the rebels had abandoned their camp up the river for some secret movement, Sir Henry Clinton sent a portion of the fleet under Capt. Barrington, in the Arethusa, under cover of a proposition for an exchange of prisoners, to see if the report was really true. But the rebels were really there. The proposition for an exchange of prisoners were received in the most insulting manner, a mere verbal reply being sent by a boy. Capt. Barrington afterwards opened a bombardment on the earthworks to which the rebels replied, with the full force of their batteries. The fleet sustained an exceedingly heavy fire with the greatest gallantry, until the Dreadnaught was disabled by two round shot through her hull. Capt. Barrington then returned with his vessels to New York. He reports that the rebels must have lost at least fifty men in the engagement."

"Well, I didn't loose anything after all, by not going with the army," thought Bob gleefully, and, long years after he used to tell how, all by himself, he held the British forces in New York at bay until Washington and Rochambeau could capture Cornwallis and end the war.—J. A. A. in N.Y. World.

FIELDS OF 50,000 ACRES.

And Straight Strings of Fences Over 80 Miles Long—In Texas, of Course.

Very few people at a distance, in thinking of western Texas, understand that nearly the whole of it is at present fenced up in mammoth pastures, yet such is the case. Many of them are larger than ordinary counties, and some of them embrace large parts of three or four counties.

Just west of Belcherville, Tex., come the Silverstein, the Ikeard, and the Worsham pastures. This latter contains 50,000 acres, and has one line of fence 23 miles long. Pastures of about this size continue in almost unbroken succession until we reach Armstrong county. There we find what is known as the Goodnight ranch, the southern boundary of which is a little string of fence 83 miles long. Charley Goodnight, as the owner is familiarly known, is considered one of the richest men in Pan Handle, but I really feel sorry for his boys if he ever sends them out on a hot afternoon to stop hog holes in that line of fence. It is hardly likely that this is the case, however, as all fences in that country are built to turn cattle, and without reference to hogs. There is a little railway station called Goodnight, which consists of the Goodnight residence and the depot. Mr. Goodnight lives in almost baronial style. His park contains deer, a drove of elks, and one of the few herds of buffalo in the United States.—Chicago Times.

CHAPTER III.

HORACE RIDDLE TELLS THE TRUST.

In the pause which followed the detective's declaration, both men heard the sound of sleigh bells.

"There is Dr. Maxwell," exclaimed the clergyman. "I know the bells. Can we not prevent his useless journey?"

At the first words the detective had run out of the room. Mr. Warren hurried after him. When he reached the front door, Mulligan was returning up the walk.

"I called to him but he did not hear me," said the detective. "At any rate he did not stop. I should say that there wouldn't be much use in chasing the team he's driving."

Mr. Warren shook his head. The doctor's horses were much the best in Williston.

"He will drive to the junction, I suppose," said Mulligan. "That's the only place in these parts that a man can get away from in winter. Very good, I have half an hour to spare. Suppose I tell you what I know about this case?"

"Do in Heaven's name! I can never rest until it is all made clear."

"If you expect me to make it all clear to-night," rejoined the detective, "I may as well warn you that you'll be disappointed. This is at once the simplest and the most complicated puzzle I ever saw, and I've had a hand in the best that Boston could afford, including the famous Bell case."

"How do you know that the crime was committed in this town?" demanded the clergyman. "I hold Edward Ames guilty, and yet you say that the story that he was here was a lie. Why did my daughter come here? Where did she meet her murderer? Why did she not come to me?"

"She came to you," said the detective, gravely. "Indeed, the fact that she did so is almost my only clew."

"What! She came here?"

"Mr. Warren, I don't want to startle you, but it is an unquestionable fact that, a little after nine o'clock last night, your daughter stood outside that window and looked in upon you as you sat at work."

What would the grief-stricken man have given in exchange for the power to take that knowledge back with him such a little way into the past? His life, gladly, for it would have saved hers.

"You can guess how I know this," continued the detective. "It was not a difficult problem. Assuming that the crime was committed here, I thought it fair to believe that the girl came to this town of her own free will. People are not carried about the country prisoners, in these days. Believing that, I knew where to go for traces of her presence. I have seen too many of such cases to have any doubt what she would do.

"So I made investigations under your window. The snow was soft and wet that night up to nine o'clock when the cold snap set in. Her footprints, formed in the wet snow, were perfectly preserved. It was only necessary to brush away an inch or two of light snow that lay over them. Then I made my measurements. I had just completed them when a noise that I made alarmed you in here, and I had to get away. By the courtesy of Capt. Thompson I was enabled to compare my measurements with your dead daughter's shoes, and the result leaves no doubt as to the state of the case."

"Sir," said Mr. Warren, "it seems to me that you solve this dark riddle completely. At the time you mention, and thereafter, the coffin which was supposed to contain the body of Ned Ames lay in his father's house. Who watched beside it? Who permitted my daughter's body to be hidden in it?"

"There," said the detective, laying his hand on the clergyman's arm, "you touch exactly the point where the mystery becomes as dark as the tomb. Here are the facts. It was Mr. Ames who watched beside the coffin. We insisted upon it, and sent his son Frank to bed after the latter had volunteered for that duty. Frank was worn out with his journey and at last consented to his father's arrangement."

"This is madness," exclaimed Warren. "It makes Samuel Ames a party to this crime. Preposterous! I have known him thirty years and I would stake my life that he had nothing to do with this."

"So would I," responded the detective, calmly, "though I've known him only a few hours. When this case stood in my mind as it stands now in yours, I own that I was stumped. But I knew there must be some way out, for the facts were plain. If the girl was here on Thursday night she couldn't have been murdered in Boston several days before. You see, from the first it looked doubtful whether the crime could have been committed there, for in that case why was the coffin ripped open after having been once closed?"

"I had thought of that, and it had seemed to me possible Ames might have feigned death by the use of drugs and have permitted himself to be put into the coffin."

"No, sir; not into that coffin. He wouldn't have lived in it five minutes. It was airtight. No, I say again, that explanation wouldn't stand. The deed was done on Thursday night in this town, and the bodies were exchanged—"

"Exchanged! Then you believe that Ned Ames is really dead?"

"I don't know. It's barely possible. However, the essential point is that your daughter's body was put into that coffin in the Ames house on Thursday night."

"While Samuel Ames sat by and permitted it!"

"No; while he was asleep—drugged of course."

"Drugged? Are you sure of that?"

"What he says makes it practically certain. He remembers the first hour alone beside the coffin. Then he knows nothing until he found himself sitting there with the light of early morning streaming into the room. He was ashamed to own that he had slept, and so he said nothing about it until I questioned him. Then he described his experience, and his sensations as awakening in such a way as to make me perfectly confident that he was drugged; and the thing that makes his story certainly true is that he described the effect of a drug about which I'm sure that he knows nothing at all. It's a mixture of choral and one or two other poisons of that class."

"I SAY THIS WITH MY HAND ON THE BOOK."

"How was it administered?"

"Easily enough. There's a pitcher of water and a glass on the table in the dining-room of the Ames house every morning. Mr. Ames drank from that glass about ten o'clock. Of course the drug was in it. Now, the man who put it there is the murderer, but the trouble is that any man in town could have done it. Secret entrance to that room was perfectly easy on that evening."

"Might not the drug have killed Mr. Ames? I shudder at the thought of such awful sin. How can human beings do such deeds?"

"It's beyond me, but they can. However, there wasn't much danger of killing Mr. Ames. The man who used the drug was evidently skilled in its use."

"Could anyone not trained in medicine—" Warren began, and stopped aghast.

The detective looked keenly at the clergyman.

"I see what you mean," he said.

"No, no; it was merely a horrible fancy. My mind is strained to the verge of madnes."

"His flight looks bad," said Mulligan.

"Flight? Whose flight?"

"Come, Mr. Warren, let's not fence with each other. Dr. Maxwell has got out of town in a hurry."

"I won't hear of such a thing. What motive is possible? The mere fact that a drug was skillfully employed is not enough."

"Certainly not. Thieves use it."

"And Edward Ames was a thief."

"But we don't know that he was here. Come, let's see what we do know. Your daughter ran away from home some years ago. You've never been able to find any trace of her. Didn't you look too far away from home? After I left the cemetery I communicated by wire with an assistant of mine who was in the Junction, which is the nearest considerable town in this place. He was on his way here. In reply to my questions, he wired that Charlotte Warren was seen there Thursday afternoon, but he couldn't find out how she got there. Now what do you say to the theory that she's been there all the time? And if so, what young man of this place has made most frequent visits to the Junction? Who's got the speediest team of horses in the place?

"Well, that's only a theory, and I hope that Maxwell is all right. But remember that you never knew on whose account Charlotte left her home, and—"

"I have always believed that Edward Ames was guilty. If she loved Maxwell, why were they not honorably married? On the other hand, she knew there was no hope of my consenting to her union with Edward Ames."

"Well, I give that up. We don't know enough yet to consider such questions with any hope of getting anything out of them. If Ned Ames was in town at the time I'd be pretty near sure of him, but I can't get a trace of him. Who's there?"

"I hear nothing."

"There's some one at the door. Not that one; the back door of the house."

Mr. Warren went to the window and looked out.

"A man and a boy. Who can they be?"

He hurried out of the room; and presently returned with Horace Riddle and old Abner Riddle, the boy's father.

"My son's got something to say to you, Mr. Warren," said Riddle. "Speak up and tell the truth for once in your life."

This tender parental admonition appeared to make little impression on the boy. He was staring at a book on the study table.

"That's the Bible, ain't it?" he said

"It is," replied the clergyman.

"That's the book you swear on, and it makes it worse for you if you don't tell the truth. I'm willing to do it. You know I wouldn't lie to you, anyway, Mr. Warren. I never did. And if I put my hand on that book, and cross my heart, you'll be sure that what I say is true."

"If you mean to tell us that you lied in the cemetery," said the clergyman, frowning upon the young barbarian, "it's unnecessary. This man has already told me all about it."

"That's what I came here for," said the boy, firmly. "I told father that the man would tell, and you'd think what I said wasn't so. It was this way: This man came to me, and asked me flat if I'd tell a lie for a dollar, and I said I would.

"Then he told me to say what I did say up in the graveyard, and when he put those words in my mouth, you could have knocked me down with a feather. I didn't dare to tell him, for fear that I wouldn't get my dollar, but the truth was that I really did see Ed Ames in the woods back of High street, not half an hour before this man spoke to me.

"I say this with my hand on the book, Mr. Warren, and it's true—it's true as what's in the book; every word of it."

The little fellow's manner carried conviction.

"Well, I've run up against a good many queer things in my life," said Mulligan, "but this beats them all. Young man, I believe what you tell me, and I want to say that it'll be worth more than a dollar to you, before we're through with this affair.

"Mr. Riddle," he continued, "you take your son home, and keep an eye on him all the time. What he says is likely to convict somebody of murder, and I don't suppose it's necessary to tell either of you that it isn't a thing to be talked about yet."

A Young Woman of Observation Says It Varies With Every Attachment.

"I suppose it's a perfectly harmless amusement," said a young woman of observation, "but for the life of me I can't see the use of all this discussion that's going on concerning man's most attractive trait to women. Why, it is not a question of any trait of general application at all. It simply depends on the woman's idea of what is most attractive in some certain man at some certain time. She may hold to the ideal all through her girlhood that the only worshipful man is the poetic and soulful creature, and then flop completely over and throw herself at the muddy feet of the tousle headed 'half-back' of a college football team.

"It's all nonsense to say that we women have got any well-sustained, well-defined ideals of manly character. We do not fall in love with a man because he fills out our plan, but because we like the fellow; because we cannot help ourselves, in fact; and then we make the astonishing discovery that his characteristics are just those that we admire. Our ideal changes with each new case of heart affection, for if it were not so how could we manage to endure a change of sweethearts? I believe there are some girls in this world who have made a selection from the other sex by rule and rote, but they are simply freaks, and I look on them with mingled wonder and pity.

"Courage, tenderness, deference, devotion, physical charms, mental attainments; these are all characteristics that we like in men, but it is silly to try to pick out any one of them as being the most attractive to woman in general. To every woman that manly quality is most charming which is possessed by the man most charming to her. He is not charming because his qualities first made him so, but his qualities are the most charming because she finds them in him.

"Just now, by the by, my opinion is that the most charming characteristic in a man would be that of consenting to buy a new dress without the faintest reference to making over an old one."

Would Not Stand It.

"Yes, sire," humbly said the secretary.

THATCHER'S NEWEST HAT.

The Sad Story of How He Came to Be Wearing It—One Mash that Was Most Complete.

"Yes, this is a new hat"—said George Thatcher, Plainfield's favorite minstrel, to a group of listeners at the North Avenue station on the occasion of his last flying visit home. "It is the second one I have bought already this Winter, and thereby hangs a tale. It chanced that I dropped in to see Francis Wilson one Saturday when that comedian was playing an engagement in Abbey's Theatre, New York. As I sat down in the seventh row of the orchestra I noticed that directly behind me was an awfully pretty girl whom I had never seen before. It was in the middle of the play, I think, when I chanced to put my feet under my chair and I touched what was evidently her foot. Presently the same thing occurred again. I noticed that she did not withdraw her foot, and finding the sensation agreeable I repeated it. To my gratification I observed a gentle resistance on her part which showed she did not object to the contact. I glanced around and thought she smiled slightly. As I have said before, she was deucedly pretty, and I said to myself, 'Old boy, you have made an impression.' Of course I was bound to follow it up.

"Renewing the contact as before, I experienced the same result. I exerted a harder pressure, which was received with the same gentle resistence. I looked around once more and again I thought that she smiled slightly, though I could not be sure. I tried with the other foot; it was quite delightful. I forgot all about the play in the excitement of the sport.

"Various plans I revolved in my brain for establishing some better mode of communication with the fair damsel in order that I might find out who she was with a view of establishing the flirtation on a more satisfactory basis in the future. I thought of writing a small note, folding it in the shape of a cocked hat and sticking it in the back of my collar, from which it would be easy enough for her to abstract, but I was afraid somebody would observe it, particularly an old lady who was her companion and evidently her chaperon.

"On reflection I decided to communicate with her in some way as we were leaving the theatre. So I waited patiently, still renewing the contact occasionally as before. I was perfectly satisfied I had made a mash of the largest size. In fact I was not mistaken, for when the curtain dropped at the end of the play I looked for my new silk hat and found it under the seat crushed into a shapeless mass. It was that which I had been kicking all the afternoon instead of the young lady's foot, and I demolished it so completely that it was beyond repair. I purchased this one the next day. How does it look?"

The Villian Killed by Lightning.

Jacob Litt's elaborate production of "Shaft No. 2", which comes to Music Hall Friday, Feb. 8, is called an electrical melodrama because its hero is an electrical engineer, and its main effects are produced by electricity. The scenery is beautiful, the story well told, the dialogue good, and the situations startling in their originality and realism. One in particular has the rare merit of novelty, for the villian's life is taken by a tremendous fork of jagged lightning. The illusion is perfect.

Another scene of thrilling interest is the interior of a shaft in a big coal mine, and the rescue of the heroine as the car, which has become unmanageable, comes crashing down the terrible incline.

The electrocution chamber in the State Prison also is shown; indeed, the play possesses more than its share of new situations and effects.

Could n't Get a Quorum.

The game which was scheduled for last evening between the C. Y. M. L. bowlers and the St. Joseph's of Jersey City on the latter's alleys was forfeited because of the difficulty experienced by Capt. Hibbits of the home team in securing the requisite number of players. The bowling committee have disbanded the team for the season and no other scheduled games will be played.

Another Story for the Vault.

As a result of the city's search for quarters where a fireproof vault would be provided for the municipal valuables, it is understood that Landlord Coward has agreed to add another story to the vault in the building where the city now has its offices, and that the third story of the vault thus provided will be placed at the disposal of the Council. The first story is used by Jeweler Doane, and the second by Engineer Dunham.

Many stubborn and aggravating cases of rheumatism that were believed to be incurable and accepted as life legacies, have yielded to Chamberlain's Pain Balm, much to the surprise and gratification of the sufferers. One application will relieve the pain and suffering and its continued use insures an effectual cure. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

THE NEW WHITE'S.

As Big as All Out Doors, and Supplies Plainfield With Her Indoor Comforts.

It 's as much fun as going to a church fair, and a good deal more profitable, to attend the continual bazar provided on West Front street by Edward White. Mr. White is one of Plainfield's most successful merchants because he gives the people not only their money's worth but also as varied a choice of bargains as in any metropolitan house. The old White's store was a great thing as far as it went, but the new White's goes a good deal farther. It is immense, and if you have n't been in to see you must go now and keep up with the times.

Having doubled the capacity of his store, White is now able to display to advantage the wonderful stock of all sorts of goods that he carries, and buyers are amazed and delighted. Every department is now placed on the one big floor, and each is kept distinct from its neighbors, so that a customer can always know exactly where to go for any piece of goods, just as well as the clerks.

The display is beautiful, and is worthy of a visit just to see what White's has grown to be. If something is wanted for the feminine wardrobe, or toilet, or house, you will readily find what you need, and it is yours at a price that will make you glad you came. White is a genuine bargain-giver, and the people are the profiters thereby. The quality of his wares is proved in their daily service in every Plainfield household, and the saving on purchases made there enables bank accounts to accumulate for the patrons of this house.

White's is central, a fact that also makes it popular. Its owner and its clerks are alike experienced and courteous. It is a pleasure to trade there. The two big stores thrown into one make such a wonderful place that one might well exclaim it to be like the treasure caves of Aladdin. All day it is busy with traffic, and bright with the animation of clerks and customers. The rainbow hues of the wares make a gay display, and the lights at night add to the fascination of it all. An especially pretty effect is made by the electric lamps in the show cases. These cases have two stories, and are themselves a novelty.

Mr. White says he has never seen the time when there was not a customer in the store. Indeed, White's is proverbial for its unceasing business. Besides the great local trade, the big store is favored with a large out-of-town trade, many people from the country making that their headquarters for supplies. Dress goods, fancy goods, novelties, coats and cloaks, linen, table and kitchen ware, toys, household utensils, lace curtains, portieres, hats and millinery, anything that is wanted for feminine fancy or utility, is to be found at White's, and Plainfield's experience has been and will continue to be that White's is the most central and most satisfactory department store of this section to supply the general and special needs of the dress-wearing and housekeeping portion of the community.

Faust.

As before noticed in these columns the Monday Afternoon Club has planned what promises to be a delightful entertainment for next Monday afternoon. George Riddle, the distinguished elocutionist, has been engaged to give readings from Goethe's "Faust", with organ accompaniment by Frank Taft. The club designs to make this entertainment a gift to the people of Plainfield, and to this end complimentary tickets are being distributed by the members. The Seventh-Day Baptist Church, with its fine organ, has been generously loaned for the afternoon, and it should be filled with an appreciative audience. Admission will be by ticket only. In speaking of the novel combination of words and music, Mr. Riddle says, "My own recent experience is to the effect that music may be a most powerful factor in making impressive and giving color to a reading". He is certainly an authority on this subject, since his great abilities and high ideals have made him deservedly popular.

East Side Whist Club.

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ball of East Fourth street, who with their hosts constitute the East Side Whist Club, were most pleasantly entertertained at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Ball Tuesday night The game was a close and exciting one, resulting in a score of 40-45 in in favor of the "45" Refreshments and social chat followed the game and the occasion was heartily enjoyed by all who participated.

Those who constitute the club are Mr. and Mrs. Ball, Mr. and Mrs. William Mosher, Mr. and Mrs. William Millard, Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Swick, and Messrs. A. Albertis and Earnest Millard.

Chinatown Tonight.

"A Trip to Chinatown" has a lasting hold upon the theatre-goer everywhere, and is sure of a big house in Music Hall tonight. Its pretty story, its beautiful scenic investiture, and its innumerable bright features, combine to make up an evening's entertainment of far more than ordinary enjoyment.

A PLEA FOR THE BOYS.

By the Superintendent of the Plainfield Boys Club.

A great necessity apparent to all seems to be a place where boys can be taken and cared for and trained, who have committed minor crimes, and are on the road to join the already too large class of confirmed criminals. When we wish to have a tree bring best results as to appearance and fruit-bearing, we do not wait until it is full grown and old, but we take it in hand while it is yet young and tender and can be straightened and trained for its special use. Only a simpleton would attempt to train an old dog or other animal. Interview some wild beast tamers and they will tell you that the instances of taming old animals are very rare, and best results are only attained with the young. Look around you and see if it is not exactly so with us, who have at best only a superior order of animal life. To be sure we have reform schools at Trenton, Jamesburg and other places, and good ones they are, too. But go there and question officers or inmates, and you will find that a great many of the boys must be classed as criminals, confirmed and hardened, having been arrested time and again, some of them having committed burglaries and such like crimes. But the boy I plead for is he who is in the main but unruly and by evil associates will be led away until he too must be classed among criminals. For instance, here is a boy whose parents love him dearly. His father is a hard-working machanic, away from home from 6:45 in the morning until 6:15 at night He has outgrown the authority of his mother, and his father can not look after him. The boy roams the streets, plays "hookey" from school whenever he can, gets in company with really bad boys, commences to pilfer in a small way from street stands and so goes on from bad to worse until he finally brings up in court and is sentenced to prison. Then someone thinks it his duty to hold out a helping hand, but among other things the boy has learned to be deceitful and so may think something may be gained by appearing to repent, but in truth he has learned to love this way of getting along without work, without "slaving" for someone as he calls it, and when he is paroled or released, it is but a comparatively short time before he is back at his old tricks. He breaks the heart of his mother and fills his father with sorrow and shame to think that their boy, whom they strove to bring up in the way he should go, has turned out such a scapegrace. And society at large? Why, it has only another good for nothing to menace its peace and welfare and will have to take care of him in prison or when he gets old enough in the poor house. And the boy? In his better moments (for he has them at times) he thinks: If there only had been someone to take hold of him and point out the right way and "keep him in it for a time", all might have gone well. But as it is, there is no hope for him. Who will have to answer for this boy's soul in that last great day? Reflect upon this! Then ask yourself Is our criminal class increasing? Look around you for the answer. What am I doing to decrease it? You know best. Then see if you can find out what France is doing for this class of boys at Mettray, Germany at the Rauhe Haus and England in her institutions. Can you contemplate this matter calmly? Can you pass by boys on the street with vice and crime already asserting itself in their young faces, with serenity and satisfaction in what you are doing for them? Have we any such boys in Plainfield? It is not long ago that a lady told me that they could not leave the house and leave a porch rocker out but it would be missing on their return. Oh, that a mighty wave of action might strike our city, our State, our nation, the effects of which might be felt in the coming generations!

G. E. MARX.

The Stites Will Case Settled.

The contested will of Henry F. Stites of Fanwood was finally disposed of in the Union County Court yesterday, the administrator pendente lite, James E. Martine of Plainfield, turning over all his accounts to ex-Postmaster Elias R. Pope of Plainfield. The real estate of the deceased is worth about $8,000 and there are from $10,000 to $12,000 in cash and personal property. The Muhlenberg Hospital of Plainfield gets most of the estate. The Court allowed Mr. Martine full commissions, $470.00, and Counselor W. K. McClure the comfortable fee of $450 for his services.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

STREET RAILWAY EXTENSIONS.

Work to Be Begun This Spring, in Any Event.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company and the Plainfield Street Committee have been for some time discussing the proposed extensions. The committee insist on concessions to the city, which Mr. Nevins angrily refused, saying that before he'd grant them he'd sell out for what the road had actually cost him. Mr. Fisk asked for 30 days option on that offer, and Mr. Nevins subsided.

The company state that they will surely begin work on the extensions this Spring. They claim to have the rights of way for the following routes: To Netherwood by Fifth and Richmond streets and Putnam avenue. To Fanwood by Third street and Terrill road. To Dunellen by Front street. The track is to be single, with turnouts.

Confer Not with Flesh and Blood.

The meetings in Grace M. E. Church are growing in interest. The largest attendance of any week night was that of last night. Rev. H. F. Randolph preached from the words of Paul, "And immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood". Flesh was interpreted as signifying the world; and blood, social or race affiliations. Paul was guided by the Holy Ghost, knowing that human wisdom was fallible. The preacher advised the unconverted not to let temporal questions affect their decielons to obey God; nor their own weaknesses; nor the opinions of others; nor the fact that there are unworthy people in the church. In what profession or calling, he asked, can any one engage, in which he will not find dishonest and unworthy men? A man would be foolish who refused to be a lawyer, or a merchant, or a physician, because there are diereputable lawyers, tricky merchants, and quack doctors. Every man should decide questions affecting his eternal welfare in his own heart and in the presence of his Maker. There will be short sermons tonight and tomorrow night.

Plainfield Still Winning.

The Plainfield Bowling team and the Alcyones of Elizabeth rolled a most exciting game last evening in the tournament for the Journal trophy. Enthusiasm ran high all through the game, especially at the windup, when the crowd fairly went wild. The score:

Plainfield's Red Men.

A very interesting Council fire of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe No. 193, was held last night in their wigwam, several important matters concerning the order coming up for discussion. Several palefaces are awaiting their degrees, and as new applications are constantly being received it has been deemed best to defer the ceremonies of initiation so that a large number can be received at once. The date will shortly be announced. After the regular council sleep the Haymakers Association which, by the way, has just received its new charter, went into session. The usual pleasant features of these gatherings were enjoyed last evening, many motions of importance being passed and several new applications being received.

Immortalizing a Motorman.

The Youth's Companion of Jan. 17 prints the story of the rescue by Motorman Harry Martin of the Plainfield Street Railway of the little girl who fell from a second story window in Grant avenue, with the following comment:

"On the battlefield a general must sometimes think quickly, and act without hesitation. This motorman showed himself to be gifted with these admirable traits"

Songs and Readings.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle says: "The Verdi Ladies Quartette won favor, both for their appearance and their skill as vocalists. Each of them is a well-known soloist, they sang in perfect harmony, and had to decline repeated recalls."

The quartette will sing, and Miss Addie Parker Jackson will read, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., Tuesday Feb. 5

Had n't Heard of It.

Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Gazette, Middletown, N. J., believes that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should be in every home. He used it for a cold and it effected a speedy cure. He says: "It is indeed a grand remedy, I can recommend to all. I have also seen it used for whooping cough with the best results." 25 and 50c bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

Album Pictures in Church.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church gave a sociable in the church parlors last evening. After refreshments were served, the programme was announced. "Aunt Samantha's Album" was the title, and it consisted of a series of tableaux representing the childhood, girlhood and old age of Aunt Samantha, and a few miscellaneous pictures.

A large frame was set up between the parlors. On the outside was a curtain on which was the word "Album". Behind the "album" was a small room in which the pictures were grouped, and a strong light was thrown on them. The large room, where the audience was seated, being dark, the effect was very striking. Miss Bessie Randolph as the "Flower Girl" was especially pleasing. About thirty tableaux were shown, and afforded a very enjoyable entertainment.

Those whose took part in the entertainment were Miss Bessie Randolph, Miss Lulu Clawson, Miss Louise Lewis, Miss Ernestine Smith, Mrs. P. D. Ross, Miss Mineola Tomlinson, Miss Bessie Titsworth, Frank Hubbard, Rolland Tomlinson, Clarence L. Titsworth, Frank Clawson and others.

The last of the enjoyable "At Homes" on January Wednesdays given at the residence of Mrs. Tracy on West Eighth street yesterday afternoon, was the occasion for a pleasant gathering of friends to whom the cordial informality of these occasions was a most happy relief after the many demands of the season now drawing to its close. Mrs. Tracy was assisted in receiving by her daughters, the Misses Emily, May and Edith Tracy, and her daughters-in-law, Mrs. Howard Tracy and Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy. During the afternoon Russian tea was poured and and a dainty collation was served. The departing guests did not fail to express their appreciation of the pleasure afforded them at being present.

A Plainfield Woman's Plea.

Mrs. David P. Hall of this city addressed the Legislative Committee yesday on the the plea for the admission of women to the bar. She argued that New Jersey legislators ought to grant this request, that if not, they would shut the door to at least one avenue of self-support for women, and possibly drive them unto others far less respectable.

Four Big Successes.

BUT TWENTY-ONE SAVED

Crashed Into by the British Steamer Crathie Fifty Miles Off Lowestoft in the Early Morning—Appalling Struggle for Life in the Darkness—One Woman Saved—She Relates Her Thrilling Experience—List of the Rescued Passengers—Description of the Lost Vessel.

London, Jan. 31.—The North German Lloyd steamship Elbe, bound from Bremen for New York, was sunk in a collision with a small steamer fifty miles off Lowestoft yesterday morning. She carried 380 souls. But twenty-one survivors have been landed and a few others may still be afloat in one of the ship's small boats. At 10 o'clock last evening the number of lives lost was given out as 350.

The survivors of the wreck were landed at Lowestoft by the fishing smack Wild Flower. They are:

Stollberg, third officer; Neussell, first engineer; Weser, paymaster; Schultheiss, Linkmeyer and Sitting, assistant paymasters; Furst, chief stoker; Vicebe, steward; Wenning, Singer and Seibert, sailors; Dreson and Batko, ordinary seamen; Deharde, German pilot; Greenham, English pilot; Hofman, Lugen, Schlegel, Vevera and Miss Anna Buecker, saloon passengers, and Bolthen, a steerage passenger.

Hofman's home is in Nebraska. His wife and boy went down with the ship. All of them were in a pitiable condition. The passengers were but half clothed. Their few garments were frozen stiff, their hair was coated with ice, and anxiety and effort had exhausted them so completely that they had to be helped ashore. The officers and sailors were fully dressed, but their clothes had been drenched and frozen and they had been almost paralyzed with cold and fatigue.

They had been ashore three hours before they had recovered sufficiently to tell the story of the wreck. Their accounts agreed upon the following points:

The Elbe left Bremen on Tuesday afternoon. The few hours of the voyage before the disaster were uneventful. At 4 o'clock yesterday morning the wind was blowing very hard and a tremendous sea was running. The morning was unusually dark. Numerous lights were seen in all directions, showing that many vessels were near by. The captain ordered, therefore, that rockets should be sent up at regular intervals to warn the crafts to keep out of the Elbe's course.

It was near to 6 o'clock, and the Elbe was some fifty miles off Lowestoft, coast of Suffolk, when the lookout man sighted a steamer of about 1,500 tons approaching. He gave the word, and, as a precaution, the number of rockets was doubled and they were sent up at short intervals. The warning was without effect. The steamer came on with unchecked speed, and before the Elbe could change her course or reduce her speed notably, there was the terrific crash of the collision.

The Elbe was hit abaft her engine room. When the smaller steamer wrenched away, an enormous hole was left in the Elbe's side. The water poured through and down into the engine room in a cataract. The room filled almost instantly. The engines were still and the big hulk began to settle.

The passengers were in bed. The bitter cold and rough sea had prevented any early rising and none except the officers and crew on duty, was on deck when the ship was struck. The shock and crash roused everybody. The steerage was in a panic in a moment and men, women and children half-dressed or in their night clothes, came crowding up the companion ways. They had heard the sound of rushing water as the other steamer backed off and had felt the Elbe lurch and settle. They had grasped the fact that it was then life or death with them and almost to a man had succumbed to their terror. They clung together in groups, facing the cold storm, and cried aloud for help or prayed on their knees for deliverance.

The officers and crew were calm. For a few moments they went among the terror stricken groups, trying to quiet them and encouraging them to hope that the vessel might be saved.

It was soon apparent, however, that the Elbe was settling steadily. The officers were convinced that she was about to founder and gave orders to lower the boats. In a short time three boats were got alongside, but the seas were breaking over the steamer with great force and the first boat was swamped before anybody could get into it.

The other two boats, lowered at about the same time, were filled quickly with members of the crew and some passengers, but the number was small as the boats held only twenty persons each.

The boat carrying the twenty-one persons who were landed at Lowestoft put off in such haste from the sinking steamer that nobody in it noticed what became of the other boat. The survivors believe, however, that she got away safely. They say that they tossed about in the heavy seas for several hours before they sighted the Wild Flower.

The little smack bore down on them at once and took them aboard. They were exhausted from excitement and exposure. Several of them were in a state of collapse and had to be carried and dragged from one boat to the other.

Miss Anna Buecker, the only woman in the party, was prostrated as soon as they got clear of the Elbe. She lay in the bottom of the boat for five hours with the seas breaking over her and the water that had been shipped half covered her body. Although her physical strength was gone, she showed true pluck, however, and did not utter a word of complaint and repeatedly urged her companions not to mind her but look after themselves. Hofman's leg was hurt severely while he was changing boats.

The survivors can not say too much in praise of the Wild Flower's crew who gave them every possible attention. Upon landing, the survivors were taken in charge by B. S. Bradbeer, the German consul at Lowestoft, who sent some to the Sailor's home and others to the Suffolk hotel. Miss Buecker, who took passage to Southampton, will probably be able to go to London in a few days.

The United Press reporter called at the Sailor's home to see Miss Buecker. The doctor said that she was in such a state of physical and nervous exhaustion when she arrived that he had put her to bed. She had rested and felt much better, and would not suffer any permanent injury from her experience. Miss Buecker said:

"I was in bed when the steamer struck. I was aroused by a great crash, followed by shouts and the trampling of feet on deck.

"It was dark when I reached the top of the stairs leading to the deck. I found that two of the life-boats were being lowered, and ran to one of them. The steamer was sinking gradually. One side was already low in the water.

"Some men shoved me in the boat, which was then lowered. We had hardly reached the water before the boat upset and all were thrown out. As that part of the Elbe was partly submerged, most of the others managed to get back on the steamer.

"I went under, and when I came up clutched the bow of the capsized lifeboat. I clung to it desperately until another life-boat that had been launched picked me up. We suffered terribly until the Wild Flower rescued us. I lost all my clothes, but I saved my money and watch, which I had in the belt round my waist."

The steamship Elbe, of the North German Lloyd line, was built in Glasgow in 1881 by J. Elder & Co. Her gross tonnage was 4,510; net tonnage, 2,810. She was 418.2 feet in length, 44.9 feet beam and 35.4 feet depth of hold.

K. Von Gessel was captain of the vessel. She was licensed to carry 848 passengers; 182 first class, 166 second class and 500 steerage. She had a crew of 175 men all told.

The Elbe was elaborately decorated within, more so than many of the larger and swifter steamers.

Some of her sister ships have been very near to total destruction, notably the Elder, which ran on the rocks off the Isle of Wight on January 31, 1892, just three years ago. All of her 300 or more passengers were saved.

Again, within the past year, the Ems broke her crank shaft in midocean and drifted about helplessly for five days before she was taken in tow off the Azores by the tank steamer Wildflower and safely towed into port.

The Elbe was inspected by United States steamship inspectors on Friday, January 11, and left the port of New York for Bremen on Jan. 16.

Among the passengers on the Elbe were two United States mail messengers in charge of the mail coming to America. They are H. H. Hall, of Dennis, Mass., and P. J. Holtzman, of New York.

Rotterdam, Jan. 31.—The steamer Crathie, from Rotterdam for Aberdeen, has returned to Maasluis, her stem having been stove by coming into collision with an unknown vessel early yesterday morning, thirty miles from Hook, Holland.

It is supposed that the Elbe is the steamer with which the Crathie was in collision.

ICE HARVESTERS STRIKE.

They Demand an Increase of Twenty-five Cents a Day.

Kingston, N. Y., Jan. 31.—The first ice strike of the season of any proportion on the Hudson river is now on at Glasco where about 1,000 men have quit work demanding an increase of 25 cents a day. The strike started at the house of the Glasco Ice company when 500 men threw down their tools and demanded that the men who worked indoors storing the ice be paid $2 instead of $1.75 a day. The demand being refused the men marched to the Oakes & Thompson house, nearby, and compelled the men employed for that firm to quit work as the in-door men there were also receiving $1.75 a day.

Later half of the men of the Glasco company went back to work at the pay offered, but when the Oakes & Thompson men learned of this they went to the ice field of the Glasco company and told the men that whereas they had compelled them to quit in the morning they did not think it right for them to return to work.

The Oakes & Thompson strikers then compelled the two hundred Glasco company harvesters to stop work. The strikers held a meeting and decided to visit the Knicerbocker and other houses and compel the men to quit unless they are receiving $2 a day for in-door work.

NO FINANCIAL MEASURE

Mr. Vest Takes a Firm Stand Against the Issue of Gold Bonds—Japanese Treaty Ratified in That Body—Pacific Railroad Refunding Bill Discussed in the House.

Washington, Jan. 31.—If there had been any lingering hope left that the finance committee of the senate would be able to agree upon some measure of financial relief at the present session, such hope was definitely dispelled in the course of the discussion which broke out immediately after the reading of the journal.

One of the leading democratic members of that committee, Mr. Vest, of Missouri, in presenting resolutions of the St. Louis Merchants' exchange favoring legislation on the lines of the president's recent message, took a firm stand against any such legislation, and expressed the opinion that the Merchants' exchange had not given proper consideration to the subject, and did not represent the intelligent opinions of a majority of the people of Missouri. He declared that he would never vote to issue one bond for the purpose of securing gold, in order that the country might remain on a single gold standard, and replied to a question as to whether the finance committee would agree upon a plan, that there was not the slightest possibility of its doing so.

A leading republican member of the same committee—Mr. Sherman, of Ohio—expressed the same opinion, saying that the committee on finance was utterly helpless to deal with the question; and that the best thing that the senate could do would be to discharge the committee from its further consideration, take up the question itself, and give the necessary relief to the country.

After this subject was dropped the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and having ratified the Japanese treaty, adjourned.

House of Representatives.

The discussion of the Reilly Pacific railroad refunding bill was begun in the house, after a most remarkable and acrimonious debate on the resolution reported from the committee on rules, providing for the consideration of the measures. It proposed to debate the bill all day yesterday and this morning and vote on its passage at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon, and it was violently attacked for unduly restricting debate by Messrs. Boatner (dem., La.), Maguire (dem., Cal.), Bryan (dem., Neb.) and Cooper (rep., Wis.), and defended by Catchings (dem., Miss.), Kyle (dem., Miss.) and Reilly (dem., Pa.)

The attitude of the democratic party toward the question involved in the bill was interjected by Mr. Holman (dem., Ind.), who asserted that the party had always frowned upon every attempt to settle the matter.

This was vigorously denied by Mr. Catchings, who criticised Holman's "previousness" and asserted that the statement was untrue. Mr. McMillin (dem., Tenn.) joined in the colloquy which was conducted with much gesticulation and denunciation and pounding of the speaker's gavel, and was finally ended only by the efforts of the sergeant-at-arms.

The demand for the previous question on the passage of the resolution was seconded by a vote of 133 yeas to 121 nays, and then, before the direct vote was taken upon the passage of the resolution, a modification was accepted by Mr. Catchings and it was agreed to by unanimous consent.

As adopted the resolution provides for general debate up to adjournment of to-day's session (which shall begin at 11 o'clock), and in whatever time the committee on the District of Columbia shall not occupy of Friday's session. Saturday's session, also beginning at 11 o'clock, shall be devoted to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule until 4:30 o'clock, when the vote shall be taken on its passage.

The debate was begun by Mr. Reilly (dem., Pa.), in favor of the bill and by Mr. Harris (dem., Kan.), in opposition, and their speeches exhausted the day's session.

A house bill was passed authorizing the chief official of any state penitentiary or jail to open the mail of a prisoner he has reason to believe is intended to be derogatory to the discipline of the institution.

A senate bill was passed granting a right of way across the Sioux reservation, South Dakota, to the Forest City & Sioux City Railroad company.

Mr. Hatch (dem., Mo.) reported the agricultural appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1896, and it was placed on the calendar.

The house banking and currency committee finished consideration of the Springer banking bill and it will be reported to the house with amendments to-morrow.

IS SUICIDE A SIN?

Robert G. Ingersoll Says It is Not.

WHAT THE GENIAL PHILOSOPHER REALLY MEANS.

Other Equally Eminent Men Differ From His Views.

A QUESTION INVOLVED EACH OF US MUST DECIDE.

A Letter of Powerful Interest to Our Readers.

The eloquent Robert G Ingersoll, in a recent communication to the New York World, takes the ground that suicide is not always a sin. New York's most eminent clergymen, statesmen and judges, immediately filled the columns of that paper with protestations against the great thinker's theory.

What Mr. Ingersoll really said and meant was, that under certain circumstances suicide was not a sin For instance, he thought that in case of a person suffering with sickness and hopeless of a cure, it would not be a sin to end such suffering by self-destruction.

Mr. Ingersoll's idea was the humanitarian one of arresting pain. But he forgot that it is often difficult—nay, impossible to draw the line when a disease is curable or incurable.

Mere suffering should not be a warrant for self-destruction. Countless cases of terrible, yes, excruciating suffering, have been cured even after all hope was lost, and doctors have pronounced the disease incurable. Many a sufferer from disease has been brought to the verge of suicide and afterwards recovered perfect health.

An estimable lady, Mrs. Lila O. Boot, who resides at 36 Elm st., New Bedford, Mass., tells the following facts:

"I was very nervous" she said, "and my kidneys were in a terrible state, and I had awful pains in my back and side and could not sleep at night. My headache was a source of great annoyance, and I suffered much at certain periods.

"I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for it cured me of my terrible complaints; why, I felt so miserable that I often thought I would take my own life; I thank God for directing me to this wonderful remedy I deem it my duty to say that I think Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy the best medicine in the world."

Case after case like the above might be cited when all hope of cure had been abandoned, and the persons given up to die and yet this wonderful medicine has brought back health and joy unto the stricken households.

Suicide is self-destruction. It is just as much suicide to neglect one's health when slightly ill, or when apparently trivial symptoms arise, as to deliberately take one's life. To feel nervous, to have weak nerves, to be tired, listless, languid, to have headache, indigestion, constipation, and dyspepsia, to pass sleepless nights, to wake tired mornings, to be ever so slightly run down in health and strength—these are the sure precursors of serious disease to be later followed by prostration and premature death, unless attended to at once.

Suicide is a sin, and it is a suicide to neglect your health. Take this grand medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and it will make you well and strong. Take it because it cures; take it because it is a physician's prescription, the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st., New York City, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, and who gives his great medicine double value by allowing all to consult him, free of charge, concerning their diseases, either personally or by letter.

NOW A LEGAL STRUGGLE

Little Violence in the Brooklyn Trolley Trouble.

Warrants and Briefs Have Replaced Mob Rule To Some Extent—Strikers After Norton—Preliminary Move in Albany Against the Brooklyn Heights Company.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 31.—The great trolley trouble in this city is settling down to a legal struggle. There was so little violence offered yesterday that all the car lines ran without protection. No car had more than one policeman or one militiaman aboard. Colonel Eddy called four of the companies of the 47th regiment back to the armory at nightfall, and it is believed that at least half of the remainder of the 2d brigade will be called off to-day.

Justice Gaynor granted an order, answerable to-morrow, on President Norton, to show cause why he should not be made to operate all his cars on schedule time. Police Justice Walsh issued warrants for the arrest of President Norton and Superintendent Quinn on a charge that they have made their men work more than ten hours a day, and proceedings were begun before the attorney-general in Albany, for the dissolution of the Brooklyn Heights charter and the appointing of a receiver to wind up its affairs.

The application to the attorney-general was made by Messrs. Best and Giblin, of District Assembly No. 75, who were represented by Colonel James A. Dennison and ex-Speaker Sulzer. The Brooklyn Heights company was represented by Thomas S. Moore and William C. Trull. Mr. Moore spoke first and pleaded for an adjournment, saying that he had not sufficient time to prepare his answer.

Colonel Dennison objected to any delay, saying that the company was simply following its usual habit in asking for it. He said that the company had been given three opportunities to submit its answer and that every day's delay meant more expense to the county and more inconvenience to the public.

"I do not appear here," said the colonel, "on behalf of the strikers. I appear for the public, in which they are included. This company owns only three-fourths of a mile of road, but has leased about 300 miles of other roads. Its real capital is only $100,000, but it claims to have a capital of $45,000,000. The state in this matter is concerned only in the service which should be rendered to the people.

"Now, this company has violated the state law in refusing to arrange to have its employes work within the legal number of hours. It forced this strike by demanding that its electrical workmen should take the places of the gripmen. This endangered the public safety, for incompetent men should not be given control of the dangerous vehicles, and, more than this, the company has before this been endangering public safety by insisting on running its cars at a greater speed than that set by law. This is a crime, the crime of manslaughter. For months, the papers have been full of accounts of deaths by trolley cars. And yet, with this gory record, while skilled labor is employed, the company gets rid of the skilled labor and puts so much greater risks upon the public."

Mr. Moore yawned politely, and then said that he would answer all the statements clearly and satisfactorily if he could be given until Monday to prepare them. Attorney-general Hancock said that in so grave a matter he wanted to have both sides given every chance to prepare themselves, and granted the adjournment.

ALLIANCE WITH GUATEMALA.

Reported That Several Central American Republics Will Assist Her.

City of Mexico, Jan. 31.—An announcement published here that the Central American republics of Nicaragua, Honduras and Salvador, with Costa Rica to follow, would form an alliance with Guatemala, in the event of trouble with Mexico, has caused considerable comment.

Senor Castellanos, the Salvadorian minister here, on being interviewed, denied having any knowledge of the matter, and government officials state that no official confirmation of the announcement has been received.

The formation of such a Central American league would doubtless tend to increase the fast rising public sentiment in Mexico against Guatemala.

Japan After the Giralda.

London, Jan. 31.—Japan has offered to buy H. McCalmont's yacht Giralda for a dispatch boat. The government is willing to pay £50,000 plus the original cost for it, but Mr. McCalmont would not close the bargain. The Giralda is partly armored, carries quick-fire guns, and recently made a record of twenty-one knots.

GOULD TO THE RESCUE.

Offers the Vigilant for a "Running Mate" for a New Cup Defender.

New York, Jan. 31.—When it was announced that the Royal Yacht squadron had accepted the terms laid down by Commodore James D. Smith, chairman of the America's Cup committee, and, by accepting those terms had tacitly admitted that the much objurgated document was fair, square and sportsmanlike, and when it was revealed that Nat Herreshoff would devote all his talent to the design of one cup defender only, whose expense will be defrayed by Messrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Edwin D. Morgan and C. Oliver Iselin, all hands were glad. But, after the syndicate was formed and the contract placed in the hands of the Herreshoffs, there soon went up the cry—"What craft have we to try our new cup defender against, so as to 'get a line' on her speed or want of it?"

George Gould then stepped in to the rescue with a letter offering the Vigilant as a "running-mate" to the latest hope of the New York Yacht club. That the Vigilant would be beyond price as a guide to the America's Cup committee was duly conceded. At a meeting of the America's Cup committee on Tuesday night there was read a letter from George Gould in which he tendered them the use of the Vigilant for the coming summer, adding that the only right he wished to retain over the Vigilant was the right to pay all the expenses of her equipment and the cost of running her so long as the committee thought she could be of use.

SPAIN SURRENDERS.

She Restores the Lowest Rates of Duty to American Products.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Secretary Gresham understands that the modus vivendi between Spain and the United States, which has passed the senate at Madrid, will go into effect immediately. The text of the bill proposed by the Spanish government, as published officially in Madrid, is as follows:

"The government is authorized to apply to the products and manufactures of the United States which, coming from the ports of the United States, are admitted into the ports of Cuba and Porto Rico, the second column of the customs duties in force in Cuba and Porto Rico, in return for the United States applying their lowest duties to the products of the soil and industry of Cuba and Porto Rico.

"This modus vivendi will remain in force until a definitive treaty is concluded between the two countries interested or until one of them announces, three months in advance, the day on which it wishes to put an end to it."

The action of Spain in restoring the lowest rates of duty to American products is a complete surrender to the contention of the United States that as long as we did not discriminate against Cuba and Porto Rico we were entitled under the favored nation clause to the rates existing heretofore.

BLAME THE BANK EXAMINER.

Binghamton Citizens Indignant Over False Business Reports.

Binghamton, N. Y., Jan. 31.—Intense indignation has been created in this city by the publication in a New York paper yesterday of a special dispatch from this city that the city is bankrupt and business practically paralyzed.

These statements are absolutely and unqualifiedly false; not a single assignment having been caused by the recent bank failures.

The Binghamton Trust company has offered to advance to the city and county all the moneys needed to meet current expenses until the public funds now tied up can be released.

The following petition is being circulated in this city to Charles H. Preston, superintendent New York state banking department:

"We, the undersigned citizens and business men residing in the city of Binghamton, respectfully request that you dispense with the services of Bank Examiner Philo H. Backus, believing from his conduct, telegram, and public utterances relative to the difficulties and embarrassments connected with the Chenango Valley Savings bank and the National Broome County bank, that he is unfit to properly administer the duty of bank examiner."

DRAYTONS MAY COMPROMISE.

A Belief That the Divorce Suit Will Never Come to Trial.

Bernardsville, N. J., Jan. 31.—An impression prevails here, that the domestic troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Drayton will never be ventilated in court.

The general belief is that a formal separation without a trial will be the basis on which both sides may talk. The hearing now set for Monday in Jersey City may be postponed again for a week.

Hallet Alsop Borrowe will be present at the trial, should there be one. Mr. Borrowe says that he has been importuned by Mrs. Drayton's counsel to appear for her as a witness, and he will do so. The nature of his testimony he would not divulge.

Robbed a Dead Body.

Indianapolis, Jan. 31.—Word received from the scene of the Coatesville wreck says that a $1,000 diamond ring was stolen from the finger of John W. Morton, the St. Louis theatrical manager, while the corpse was lying in the little church near the railroad. Suspicion rests on a young man of the village and his arrest will probably follow.

Jackson-Mitchell Fight Collapsed.

London, Jan. 31.—The National Sporting club has declined to take charge of the fight between Charley Mitchell and Peter Jackson. The whole undertaking therefore has collapsed as far as England is concerned.

THE EVILS OF FOOTBALL

What the President of Harvard University Says.

Compares the State of Mind of Spectators at a Game To That of the Throngs Which Enjoy the Prize Fight—Players Hardly Responsible for Violent Acts.

Boston, Jan. 31.—In his report upon Harvard university for the academic year, 1893-94, President Eliot says that the year has wrought only one favorable change in the conduct of athletic sports. The men who took part in the highly competitive sports were not this year brought to the principal events in the state bordering on exhaustion in which they were brought to them in former years. He says:

"The evils of the intercollegiate sports continue without real redress or diminution. In particular, the game of football grows worse and worse as regards foul and violent play, and the number and gravity of the injuries which the players suffer. It has become perfectly clear that the game as now played is unfit for college use.

"The rules of the game are at present such as to cause inevitably a large number of broken bones, sprains and wrenches, even during trial or practice games played legitimately; and they also permit those who play with reckless violence or with shrewd violations of the rules to gain thereby great advantages.

"What is called the development of the game has steadily increased its risks, until they have become unjustifiable. Naturally the public is losing faith in the sincerity of the professed desire of coaches, captains and promoters to reform it.

"It should be distinctly understood, however, that the players themselves have little real responsibility for the evils of the game. They are swayed by a tyrannical public opinion—partly ignorant, and partly barbarous—to the formation of which graduates and undergraduates, fathers, mothers and sisters, leaders of society, and the veriest gamblers and rowdies all contribute.

"The state of mind of the spectators at a hard-fought football match at Springfield, New York or Philadelphia cannot but suggest the query how far these assemblages differ at heart from the throngs which enjoy the prize fight, cock fight or bull fight, or which in other centuries delighted in the sports of the Roman arena.

"Several fatal accidents have happened this year to schoolboys and college students on the football field; and in every strenuous game now played, whether for practice or in an intercollegiate or other competition, there is the ever present liability to death on the field.

"It is often said that by employing more men to watch the players, with authority to punish instantly infractions of the rules, foul and vicious playing could be stopped. The sufficient answer to this suggestion is that a game which needs to be so watched is not fit for genuine sportsmen. Moreover, experience indicates that it would be hard to find trustworthy watchers.

"Extravagant expenditure for the teams thoughout the season, and by the spectators at the principal games, continues to disgust the advocates of simple and rational manly sports."

MOTORS IN PLACE OF STEAM.

Consolidated Road Will Determine Whether Electricity Is Practical.

Boston, Jan. 31.—President Clark of the Consolidated road with officials of the Old Colony division, went to Nantucket yesterday, for the purpose of looking over the route of the proposed electric line from Hingham to Hull. After inspection it was unanimously conceded that the conditions were in every way favorable to trying the experiment, and upon the success of this tentative trial will largely depend similar action on other branch lines of the corporation.

President Clark said: "We are going to demonstrate whether electricity is a plaything in its relation to transportation or something that is practicable and is with us to stay. We propose placing the motors on our ordinary steam cars, the first trial of the kind, I believe, that has ever been attempted in this country. The results we obtain will largely govern our future policy in relation to other branch lines under our control."

It is believed that with the plant contemplated the cars can be run at 30 miles an hour at least, and much faster, if necessary.

Referred to the Attorney General.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The postmaster-general decided to refer the matter of the appointments made by Postmaster Warfield, in the Baltimore postoffice, claimed by the civil service commission to be a violation of the civil service law, to the attorney-general of the United States for decision.

Walked in Front of a Train.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 31.—An unknown man, apparently 45 years old, deliberately walked in front of a train at Wickford junction yesterday afternoon and was almost instantly killed. There was nothing on the person of the man by which he could be identified.

DR. W. H. MORSE.

Endorsement Based Upon Experience.

(Newark, N. J., Evening News.

"Most certainly," was the emphatic reply of Dr. Morse when asked by a "News" reporter if the words of commendation of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, that recently appeared in the press was veritable.

"I studied medicine," he said, "with Dr. A. N. Allen, for many years the leading practioner of Massachusetts. Visiting him several years after, he related to me the case of a patient of his who had been cured of stone by solvents. Naturally I inquired into the matter, and he told me, in the town of Dalton, Mass., his patient lived, and that he had literally 'suffered many things of many physicians,' and they the best of the state. There had been a diversity of opinion as to his ailment, but the doctor had diagnosed chronic inflammation of the kidneys, and his prognosis had been 'incurable.' I had known of this case—a mere wreck of a man, suffering and pessimistic. But now, greatly to my surprise, the doctor told me that he was actually cured. He had taken Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and not only had grown stronger and better, but had passed several pieces of stone The remedy had promoted the passage of the calculi and had acted as solvent. I saw this man a few days later looking well, feeling finely and speaking in the highest terms of the Remedy. I was led to examine it chemically and to test it therapeutically. My deductions have been such as to corroborate the clinical experience of many other medical men, that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy will do that which is claimed for it; and I consider it a great discovery."

The great value of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy lies in the fact that it dissolves the excess of uric acid in the blood. Many of the ailments people suffer from—for instance rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, dyspepsia, kidney, liver and urinary troubles, and the sickness peculiar to women, come from this cause. Favorite Remedy dissolves this acid, expels it from the system, thus curing the disease. In cases of scrofula, diabetes and Bright's disease, it cures where all other treatments have failed.

FOR PLAINFIELD'S PROGRESS

PLAINFIELD, N. J., JAN. 31, 1895.

A Raid With Ironclad Rams.

On Jan. 31, 1863, two Confederate ironclad rams tried to emulate the Merrimac and wipe out the Union blockaders in Charleston harbor. The Palmetto State and Chicora dashed across the bar before daylight and steamed silently toward the nearest enemies. The Mercadita lay in the path of the Palmetto State, which stood directly for her, intending to strike her prow. Taken by surprise, the outlook on the former hailed: "What steamer is that? Drop your anchor. You'll be into us." The answer was, "This is the Confederate steamer Palmetto State." Commander Stillwagen quickly ordered the Mercedita's guns opened. At the same instant the ram crashed into the ship, and one of her guns put a 7 inch shell through the Mercedita's condenser and steam drum, tearing a hole in her port side 5 feet square. She instantly filled with steam, and voices from below called out: "Shot through the boilers! Fires put out! Water over fireroom floor! Vessel sinking fast!"

"Surrender, or I'll sink you!" shouted Commander Rutledge from the Palmetto State. Stillwagen responded: "I can make no resistance. I surrender."

Meanwhile the Chicora passed on to sea, moving in a circle in the midst of the fleet and firing at everything in sight. Commander Le Roy of the Keystone State peppered the ram with shells, which rolled idly down her iron sides. He then drove his vessel hard at the Chicora, aiming to strike her stern, but the latter turned, and with her forward pivot gun sent an incendiary shell into the Keystone, disabling her port wheel and setting her on fire fore and aft. Pulling out of the fight just long enough to extinguish the flames, Le Roy again steered for the ram. Before he could strike, however, the Chicora hulled his ship several times with shells, finally sending one through both her steam drums. The other Union vessels within reach gave the rams plenty of sea room until the latter returned leisurely to their old moorings in the harbor.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

If The Press is correctly informed, George W. Rockfellow will decline to serve longer on the Board of Health. He is reported as feeling that the pressure of other duties will prevent him occupying the office, in which he has served with such signal ability and zeal. In that case there will be a vacancy, the filling of which will give the Mayor a chance to make an innovation which has been repeatedly advocated in these columns, the placing of a practical sanitary plumber on the Board. The utility of such a move is apparent, and Plainfield has a wealth of expert sanitary plumbers to choose from. Especially does this suggestion commend itself at this time, when the sewers are becoming such a feature of town improvement.

"Oh, move the freight-house!" is a prayer still unanswered by the Central Railroad of New Jersey, but The Press and the people of Plainfield are not done praying. The freight-house would have been moved, but for one thing, and that was procrastination. Plans were adopted, and all was ready, and work was to be begun in a week or two. Just then order was issued commanding that no more construction be done except work already commenced, and as the freight-house project had not been actually touched it had to be abandoned with the rest. Some sweet day it may be revived by the company—if the people of Plainfield keep up their just and righteous clamor. Plainfield certainly pays enough into the treasury of the company to entitle her to this really necessary improvement, and the company is certainly able and generous enough to grant this petition of the star town of the road. Soon is the time to move, and that freight-house ought to move along with the rest of the procession.

There will be no township election in North Plainfield the coming Spring unless the present lawmakers at the State's capital repeal the law enacted by their predecessors. All the present township officials hold over, and no vacancies will occur until next year, when only citizens of the township are allowed to vote for officers to govern themselves. Then only the voters and taxpayers of the township will be allowed to elect officers outside of the borough, and residents of the borough will not be permitted to vote for township officers. All the present township committee and the clerk are residents of the borough, excepting one, Elias Alien, who resides in the township.

In the borough the election will take place Tuesday, March 12, when successors are to be elected to Mayor Needham, Councilmen Howell, Neal, Lounsbury and Winckler. Mr. Lounsbury is serving the unexpired term of ex-Councilman B. M. Fountain, who resigned as a member of last year's Council to become a member of the more lucrative body of paid officials, the North Plainfield Township Committee. Elmer E. Winckler is rounding out the unfinished term of Captain Edwards, who became weary of borough affairs. Councilmen J. C. Peck and John Valiant are the only members of the present body who hold over, each having two years to serve.

There is talk of a ticket headed by either ex Councilmen B. Arrowsmith Hegeman or Peter A. Emmons for Mayor, and with Peter B. Matthews, W. Hull Western, Samuel Schuyler, and Elston M. French, for Councilmen. They represent the young element of the borough, and should they allow their names to go before the voters there is absolutely no doubt of that ticket being successful.

Many men are besieging the Mayor on the Chief of Police question. Some urge the return of Charles W. Dodd to the office; others argue for the continuance of George W. Grant. The whole matter rests with the Mayor, for he has the appointment of policemen, and the Police Board can only select a chief from those he names as regulars. Mr. Dodd, it is well known, would not accept as a regular unless he received the office of chief. Therefore if the Mayor favors the retaining of Mr. Grant at the head of the force he has only to refrain from appointing on the force Mr. Dodd or any other likely candidate for the chieftaincy. Mr. Gilbert is not the man to make an important change of the sort proposed unless he is shown good and sufficient reason for it. No such reason has yet been advanced. Chief Grant deserves to keep the place he has so well filled, and The Press believes he will be retained as a justice to himself and as a credit to the city. Besides, The Press learns that to nominate Mr. Dodd as a regular would precipitate a motion in the Council to table or reject his nomination, as there is bitter opposition to him there; and Mr. Dodd is too good a citizen to be subjected needlessly to such unpleasant treatment.

HYMENEAL.

MacIlvaine—Laing.

The marriage of Elizabeth Harned Laing of Denver, formerly of Plainfield, to Archibald G. MacIlvaine, General Manager in the United States for the London and Lancashire Insurance Company of England, was quietly solemnized at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. George W. Fletcher, 62 West Eighty-third street, New York city, yesterday, Rev. Dr. Houghton of "The Little Church Round the Corner" officiating.

The ceremony was performed after the beautiful rituals of the Episcopal marriage service in the presence of relatives of the contracting parties. Senator MacIlvaine of Virginia and Dr. MacIlvaine of Petersburg, brothers of the groom, were present, accompanied by their mother Mrs. MacIlvaine also of Petersburg, Va.

The groom's uncle, Judge Roger A. Pryor of the New York Bar, with his wife and daughters and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene M. Laing of this city likewise witnessed the ceremony.

The wedding trip will include a short sojourn at the Ponce de Leon, St. Augustine, Florida, a sail to Havana, Cuba; thence to New Orleans, Virginia, and finally to the Hotel Waldorf, New York, which will be their future home.

Playing Hearts.

Volney F. Green entertained last evening at his home on East Fifth street the card club of which he is a member. Hearts was the game of the evening and prizes were awarded to the lucky ones. During the evening there was a vocal solo by Herbert Schutt, and music on the piano and banjo by Miss Ethel Green, Mrs. F. S. Green and Volney Green. After the cards refreshments were served and the gay party broke up about 11:15.

Those who attended were Miss Lillian Schoonmaker, Miss Lillian T Glenn, Miss Percy Emmons, Miss Elsie Jobes, Miss Florence Serrell, Miss Mary Luckey, Miss Bessie Baldwin, Miss Clara Long, Allen Taylor, Benjamin O Bowers, Jr, George P Smith, Seymour G Smith, Jr, Sydney R Titsworth, Herbert Schutt and Clifford Crane.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment, Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surface of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer $100 for any case that it fails to cure.

REMOVAL.

Dr. Lighthill begs leave to give notice that he has removed to

NO. 132 CRESCENT AVE.

(a few doors from his former location) where he can be consulted on all chronic diseases of whatever name and nature.

Dr. Lighthill refers with pardonable pride to the success of his practice in Plainfield and submits below a few of the many testimonials which he has received from grateful patients. A mass of similar ones can be seen at his office.

AN ALMOST MIRACULOUS CURE.

TO THE PUBLIC:

From a sense of duty I desire to call public attention to the almost miraculous cure which Dr. Lighthill effected in the case of my wife. For eleven years she had been afflicted with piles of an unusual severe and distressing character. She suffered every day of her life the most intense pain, attended with frequent and profuse hemorrhage. This state of things debilitated her entire system until she became a perfect wreck of her former self.

We made every effort to obtain a cure but they all resulted in bitter disappointment, although a number of physicians of excellent reputations for skill in that direction had treated her case. She grew worse and worse all the time, the pain became perfectly unbearable and I felt she could not bear the strain of her condition much longer. In this extremity, a friend of mine, Mr. W. E. Dilts, a resident of Roselle, N. J., a passenger conductor on the New Jersey Central told me that he had been similarly affected, and had been permanently cured by Dr. Lighthill, after other medical skill had failed. He assured me that the doctor would cure my wife, no matter how severe her case may be, and his prediction proved perfectly correct. In spite of her desperate condition, Dr. Lighthill, I am glad to say, has effected a complete and perfect cure in her case, and has given her new life.

Since the cure has been effected she has gained in health and strength and is so improved in appearance that her friends scarcely recognize her. They all consider her cure as almost miraculous, and Dr. Lighthill's praise is heard on every side. Our gratitude to Dr. Lighthill is unbounded and we only hope that other sufferers may be benefited by this publication.

EDWARD TEEL, JR.

16 ARLINGTON PLACE,
Plainfield, N. J., July 17, 1894.

I am profoundly grateful to Dr. Lighthill for his speedy and radical cure of a most painful malady of over ten years standing with which I was afflicted.

I deem it proper to say to all afflicted to place themselves under the care of this skilful physician and be permanently cured.

I will cheerfully impart any information I possess when called upon,

JOHN DIETRICH.

Mr. Thomas Callahan of No. 214 Richmond street Cured of a Very Distressing Trouble by Dr. Lighthill.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., June 1, 1894.

TO THE PUBLIC:

For some time past I have been greatly distressed with noises in the head. They were all over my head and troubled me constantly: they were loudest at night when everything was quiet and at such times would often keep me from sleep and disturb my rest. In fact they got to be so bad and distressing that they affected my whole nervous system as well as my health. I did not obtain the least relief until I placed myself under the care of Dr. Lighthill, of No. 132 Crescent avenue, who effected a complete cure in my case in a short time and made me a very happy man.

THOMAS CALLAHAN,
214 Richmond street.

A Card From Mr. T. R VanZandt, of Nos. 304 and 306 Park ave., Plainfield, N. J

I certify with pleasure that Dr. Lighthill has effectually cured me of a most painful case of piles. For some time past I had been subject to its attacks, but the last attack was so exceedingly painful that it completely upset my whole system. The pain extended to my legs and in many other directions, and made me so nervous that I could neither sleep, sit down, lie down or move about without serious discomfort and distress. Such was my condition when I applied to Dr. Lighthill for relief, and I am glad to say that as soon as he took hold of my case, I began to improve, and in a short time found myself completely cured. Dr. Lighthill has also effected a radical and permanent cure in a most terrible case of piles on my cousin, Mr. J. V. Z. Griggs, of Rocky Hill, N. J., whose flattering testimonial is in Dr. Lighthill's possession.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY AND THE SENATE.

Senator Hill as a Banqueter. The Illiteracy of Our People. Legislation Probably Looking to the Compulsory Settlement of Strikes by Arbitration.

The people of the United States are so in the habit of eulogizing the Republic as the most enlightened country on the globe that many will be surprised at the statement that one-tenth of our population is made up of illiterates. The actual number, as reported by the last census, is 6,324,702. There will be still greater surprise to know that these figures represent an increase of nearly one hundred thousand illiterates since 1880. As will be readily inferred, the greatest proportion of illiteracy is to be found among the Southern States. There is but one of these States in which illiterates did not constitute more than 20 per cent. of the population, while in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico and South Carolina they formed 40 or more per cent. Naturally most of the illiterates are blacks, indicating a callous indifference to the intellectual improvement of the colored race on the part of the whites. These facts and figures are the more significant when it is borne in mind that foreign illiterates who emigrate hither seldom strike below Mason and Dixon's line, but go to swell the proportion of illiterates in the North and West. This subject is a matter of serious moment to the country at large. Such a large percentage of illiteracy is a taint on the body politic, for it is impossible to expect intelligent popular rule where such a large mass of ignorant voters exist. If the South will not grapple in earnest with the illiteracy of its people, then the nation, in self-defense, should do so. It is to be hoped that the new Congress may find time to turn its attention to this problem.

Senator Hill made another great social hit at the dinner party given by John R. McLean. There were a number of brilliant society people present that the Senator would not be likely to meet at the ordinary official dinners, and the Senator proved as capable of saying as many clever things as any of them. If some of his old friends around Elmira had heard the brilliant small talk he indulged in with the ladies they would not probably have realized him to be the same who was their old political boss. Considering that the Senator has had little practice, it only shows how novel reading will improve a man socially. The dinner itself was a grand affair, like all the entertainments the McLeans give. There is not a more hospitable house in Washington, or probably in the country, and the most brilliant people to be found at the Capital can be met there.

There is a difference of opinion among those who are interested in the financial question as to whether there is any special significance behind the measure introduced by Senator Sherman. Those who have faith in the financial wisdom of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, claim that he is sincere in his efforts to help bring forward a proposition that may afford immediate and substantial relief to the Government, and that he is acting in accordance with what he believes to be the wishes of a majority of the Senate, without regard to party affiliations. On the other hand, Senator Teller, who is the accepted leader of the advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, denies that there is any significance in the introduction of the Sherman bill. Senator Platt of Connecticut agrees with the Colorado Senator that there is no significance in the bill introduced by Senator Sherman. Senator Platt says that Senator Sherman was not instructed or requested by the Republican Senators to offer any solution of the pending problem, and the introduction of his bill was an individual act. Under the existing rules in the Senate the silver men have the power to defeat any proposition that is not made satisfactory to them, and they declare that they will use that power to the best of their ability and physical endurance.

The bill for the settlement of labor disputes by an arbitration commission has been favorably reported in the House at Washington, with the declaration that the business interests of the country demand some means of settling such disputes so as to avoid disastrous strikes. The theory of the bill is that in the case of many strikes the public is a vitally concerned party and often the greater sufferer, and hence that the interests of the public, as well as those of the immediate parties to the strike, will be furthered by the amicable adjustment of the dispute. This fact finds forcible illustrations in the case of the great Chicago strike of last year and the Brooklyn strike. Both of these, with their disastrous consequences to the public, might have been averted by arbitration. But in the former case Mr. Pullman haughtily declared that there was "nothing to arbitrate," and his example has been followed by the Brooklyn trolley companies.

The friends of the Administration in the Senate succeeded in cutting off debase on the Hawaiian question just as it was becoming most vigorous and interesting, and after a lively skirmish, in which half a dozen Senators got after Mr. Gray, the Administration spokesman, and made things very uncomfortable for him. The Delaware Senator endeavored to make light of the whole Hawaiian affair, and the burden of his reply to Senators Frye, Lodge, and others was, "You wanted a war ship sent to Honolulu, and now that one has sailed, why are you not satisfied?" Senator Gray made as good a case for his clients as he could, but he received very little support from the Democratic Senators, who, with few exceptions, disapprove of the Administration's Hawaiian policy, although they are not anxious to make a public acknowledgment of the fact.

There has been much curiosity in Washington to learn the sources from which the revolutionist R. W. Wilcox and his friends obtained the necessary money to purchase the arms with which they were supplied. It has been suggested that Theophilus Davies, the guardian of Princess Kaiulani, furnished the money. Another report is that the son of Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, who is said to be engaged to the princess, may have paid for them, but nothing definite is known in Washington on this point.

PROFIT SHARING BY EMPLOYEES.

Successful Operation of the System in Some Big Chicago Dry Good Stores.

In each of the big down-town stores where the profit-sharing system is in force, the employees will soon be made happy by the distribution of the fund set aside for that purpose from the profits of the firm. Early in the year business was exceedingly dull, but toward the holidays it brightened up so perceptibly that the share for the employees will in many cases be snug little sums.

The system under which this money is distributed is something unique, and at the end of the first years's work the company is greatly pleased with the results.

Mr. J. H. Wood says that it has greatly improved the work of the salesmen, has swelled the amount of the sales made, and largely increased the wages paid.

All of the salespeople who had been in the employ of the company one year or more were then informed that if the amount of their sales for six months exceeded the total for the same period of time during the previous year they would receive a commission—averaging 2 1-2 per cent. throughout the store—on the excess. Immediately the young men and women behind the counters began to increase their efforts to sell goods, and when the first distribution was made last July some surprising results were shown. Shop girls drawing $10 a week in wages received as high as $30 in premiums for the six months. At the distribution soon to be made, Mr. Wood says that there are saleswomen in the store who will draw more than $100 as their share of the profits.

The salary of the employee is raised in ratio with the excess of the sales and according to the wage percentage which governs the department in which he works. For instance, a girl receiving $10 a week would ordinarily make $200 in twenty weeks. If, however, she was successful in exceeding the amount of sales necessary to make her salary at the percentage fixed in her department, by say $1,000, she would receive a commission on this amount of about 2 1-2 per cent., or $25. Besides this she would have her salary raised for the next six months by an amount equal to the commission per week that she has earned on her sales. In this example it would be one-twentieth of $25, or $1,25 advance per week.—Chicago Record.

The Place Was Filled.

"Madam," he said, as she held the door open a little way and asked him what he wanted, "perhaps it so happened years ago that you had a son wander away from the family fireside?"

"Yes, it did," she replied, as she opened the door a little further.

"He went out into the cold world and became a wanderer o'er the face of the earth?"

"Yes, he did."

"Days and weeks and months ran into years and you have heard no word of him? You knew not whether he lived or died?"

"As you say, I knew nothing," replied the woman, as she stood in the door and looked fixedly at the tramp.

"Well, ma'am," he continued, "I don't want to raise any false hopes, but—but——"

"But you are just a little too late," she finished, as he swallowed the lump in his throat and tried to wipe away a tear. "My wandering son returned about two hours ago and is now taking a soak in the bathtub. Had you called early this morning, you know——"

"Then the situation is filled?"

"It is."

"Just my luck, ma'am, but of course you are not to blame for it. I congratulate you and your wandering son and will bid you good day and try the family next door."—Detroit Free Press.

RADICAL IDEAS FOR GRANDMOTHERS.

Instead of Black Gowns for Old Ladies Mrs. Bishop Chooses White and Blue.

"Dress" and Mrs. Emily Bishop held the attention for nearly two hours of the audience who met recently in the Assembly Hall of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn.

"A bright young woman once told me," said Mrs. Bishop, "that she believed any woman would rather be a little uncomfortable and look nice than to have freedom from restrictions and appear old. I am inclined to consider this true, so that in order to secure an artistic form of dress which will allow unrestrained self-expression we must seek it along the pathway of beauty.

"Women have tried dress reform without regarding beauty as an essential feature and have failed. There was Mrs. Miller, daughter of Gerrit Smith, who invented the bloomer costume which Mrs. Bloomer, a friend of hers, afterward adopted. Mrs. Miller writes: 'For seven years I enjoyed perfect freedom, and then went back to long skirts, a victim to my love of the beautiful.'"

Mrs. Bishop believes that the study of three things is necessary in order to secure a style of dress which shall conform to a certain extent to the dictates of fashion, be artistic and becoming. These three essentials are form, color and fabric. "A woman who has an elegant figure must make the most of it. This applies to others as well. Every woman must study what style of dress will bring out her good points and cover up the defects."

In colors red was named as aggressive, or full of life and spirit, blue as distant and cold, and yellow as sympathetic primarily. Different hues were displayed to show the varied effects of graded tints. Mrs. Bishop did not have one good word to say for black as a color suitable for a gown.

"It is harsh; it brings out all the lines and wrinkles. It is not economical, because it cannot be worn when once it becomes rusty. It catches the dust and lint. Rough bopsacking, in the mixed colors which are so much worn, is much more economical for general utility gowns." Black satin was especially condemned.

"Do not be unhappy if you chance to have a black satin gown," continued Mrs. Bishop. "Just put some lace or chiffon around the neck to relieve the dreadful effect of the black against the face."

Mrs. Bishop advised stout women to avoid rough, heavy fabrics. These were to be left to the tall, angular women, while those who are petite may revel in light diaphanous materials, with plenty of laces and ribbons.

"Every woman should put on a bright, pretty gown at least once every day. It will make her happier, and I believe it will make her better. Let her take off her street dress when she comes home and don a becoming house dress, which need not be expensive. Some women say 'We do that when we have company and when we are invited out, but it is not worth while for those at home.' I think it is worth while for the family more than for others.

"Another thing, a neat print dress, nicely made, is far preferable for morning wear to an old dress, with hanging trail, however expensive it may once have been."

The artistic dress was described as modelled after the Greek gown. Mrs. Bishop wore a costume illustrative of that style. She also displayed a great many pieces of dress goods, showing to what age and type of women such materials were most suitable. Instead of black she chose a dainty white India silk, with pale blue flowers, as just designed for "a dear grandmother's" house dress.

Mrs. Bishop deplored very strongly the tendency to rush after new styles. "I hope by and by to have costumes for different occasions which just suit me. These I will copy over and over, with a few slight modifications. This will leave much time and strength for other things."

"A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed."

A friend advised me to try Ely's Cream Balm and after using it six weeks I believe myself cured of catarrh. It is a most valuable remedy.—Joseph Stewart, 624 Grand avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

My son was afflicted with catarrh; I induced him to try Ely's Cream Balm and the disagreeable catarrhal smell all left him. He appears as well as any one.—J. C. Olmstead Arcola, Ill.

Diphtheria Antitoxine.

FOR IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

So limited has been the supply of GENUINE ANTITOXINE heretofore, that sales have been made only on condition of immediate actual use. But amid so large a population as ours, an urgent demand for the new treatment may arise at any hour, night or day, Sunday or week-day. And delay in obtaining it might result fatally. I have therefore, with some difficulty, and at considerable expense, provided a complete outfit of Antitoxine Serum (with injector) and am prepared to meet such demand. The cost of an outfit (serum of two powers and Koch injector) is now about $12 being only one-fourth of the earlier price. At present sales will be made only on the order of a practicing physician.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

THEY ARE VERY SHOWY AND ARE ALSO VERY EXTRAVAGANT.

The Sleeve Remains the Sensation, and It Continues to Take New Shapes. Velvet Blouses are popular. Plain Skirts are also Fashionable.

Fashions in midwinter are not remarkable for new ideas or suggestive indications of the coming modes, but there is a spirit of unrest about them which brings many contradictions as to the changes we may expect. One authority asserts that the prospective skirts are to be made entirely without the haircloth lining and popular godet plaits, and that the sleeves are to be visibly reduced in size, while another positively assures us that the skirts are to be much fuller, stiffened and plaited to stand out well from the waist with the effect of a bustle, and sleeves more balloon-like than ever. But whatever may be in prospect, there is no question as to the immediate condition of fulness, and we may continue to model our gowns after the approved style of the day.

The skirts still vary in width between five and eight yards around at the bottom and the sleeve is constantly developing a new variety. The latest evening sleeve is simply a large bow of satin, velvet or ribbon about six inches wide, arranged high on the shoulder, with one large loop falling each way, and a knot or rosette in the middle. Satin loops are made double, and loops of velvet are lined with silk, while ribbon is tied in a bow with ends. A soft drapery of satin around the armhole is caught close at the top, and from this a frill of spangled lace falling down nearly to the elbow, is another pretty fancy. Sleeves are cut so that all the fulness comes from underneath instead of at the top of the arm, and again, to show the outline of the arm, at the inside, with the fulness falling at the back. The broad, sloping effect is given to the shoulders by wide, plain epaulets and fan plaitings of satin or velvet, edged with lace, as shown.

Blouses of velvet in a different color from the skirt are a very popular style in Paris. They are made quite plain, and worn with crepon, smooth cloth and silk skirts.

There is no disputing the fact that this is an extravagant period of dress, but there is such an endless variety in materials and ideas for using them that the fashions in vogue are compatible with small expense as well as large. Plain skirts are quite as fashionable as those which are trimmed elaborately with fur and jet, and at the moment nothing is more popular for dress trimming than black satin ribbon, which is not wildly extravagant even if many yards are required. A pretty idea for a colored crepon or plain woolen goods is to arrange bows of black satin ribbon five inches wide, with steel buckles in the centre, at intervals all around the bottom of the skirt. The bodice should be of silk, the same shade as the skirt, studded all over with irridescent jet, and across the front in the form of a yoke two bands of narrower ribbon. The belt, of black, must have a bow and long ends at either side of the front. Rose color, in all its shades, is still popular, and a new tone resembles the damask rose, with a shadow of black about it which makes it very rich, especially in velvet.

It is said that the tailor gowns of the early spring are to be quite lavishly and expensively trimmed with bands of the cloth stitched on in scroll patterns, with braiding, or with narrow bias bands of black satin, which is the latest fancy. These bands outline the seams of the waist and skirt.

Sashes are very popular again, particularly when they are of the new chine ribbons. A plain blue taffeta silk, made up plain for a young girl, has a sash of blue and pink chine ribbons. It is tied in a large bow in the back, and the ends fall on either side of the plaits in the skirt. Pale green silk makes a very pretty evening dress, with chine ribbon for a twist around the neck, butterfly bows on the shoulder as a substitute for sleeves, and a belt and sash at the back. Blue or pink crepons make useful dresses, and trimmed with lace insertion, two rows around the skirt, and striped on the front of the full waist, they are exceedingly pretty. Bands of satin ribbon to match the crepon go over the shoulders and terminate in rosettes and long ends on each side of the front.—N. Y. Sun.

ON KEEPING ACCOUNTS.

The Uninitiated Taught How to Keep Track of Their Money.

The woman whose price is above rubies, whose husband rises up and calls her blessed is she who knows "where her money goes." She keeps an account book.

Most women, by the way, keep account books. They have Russian leather volumes three inches by two and a half, gilt-edged and bearing in gilt letters the legend "Accounts." They usually receive these little gifts at Christmas, and for the next three weeks they make sundry unintelligible jottings in them. But that is not the sort of account book the prudent business woman or the thrifty housewife keeps.

The regulation account book makes no boast of beauty. It has stiff board covers, is about ten inches long by eight inches broad, and is provided with ruled pages. These pages are not only ruled across, but at each side they have two vertical lines ruled, making two one-inch spaces at each edge of each page. In these spaces dates and dollars and cents may be kept neatly.

The left hand page is devoted to income, and the right to expenditures. The date on which a sum of money is received, the person or source from which it is received and the amount are entered in a straight line on the left-hand side. On the opposite side the date of any expenditure, the thing for which money has been expended and the amount spent are entered. At stated times the income and the outgo are balanced. Once a week or once a month is a convenient time.

Here is a specimen page from the account book of an ordinary woman—Miss Mary A. Smith:

Car'd from p 1. .	$54.37	Car'd from p 2. .	$37.12

Miss Smith will begin next week with a blank page for expenditures and $4.10, representing her assets. As she gains more from Mr. and Mrs. P. O. Smith or any other source, she will duly set them down, and on the page opposite her manner of disposing of her wealth. The account book will serve as a record, a reminder and often as a warning. In fact it is as a warning that the account book is particularly valuable.

A FRIEND OF THE PRESIDENT.

This Storekeeper Sold Fresh Eggs, and Cleveland Made Him Postmaster.

Lakewood is a fashionable resort in New Jersey, and William J. Harrison is its storekeeper. And Mr. Harrison seems to be a very lucky man.

As every one knows, the President and his wife have a cottage at Lakewood, Mr. Harrison keeps store there and sells Mrs. Cleveland groceries and other household necessities when she is a resident. In this way she came to know Mr. Harrison, and nobody was surprised when he was made postmaster during Mr. Cleveland's first term. Then Mr. Cleveland further showered attention upon him by presenting him a handsome dog, which the storekeeper naturally prizes very highly, but the climax had not yet been reached.

Recently Senator McPherson indorsed Harrison's papers for reappointment as postmaster. It is understood that this was merely a formal act, as the President would have appointed him anyway. At any rate, a man who can hold a postoffice for one term, get a present from the President and then be chosen again for a Federal position must be regarded as rather generously blessed with good fortune.—Washington Post.

GOWNS FOR SUMMER DAYS.

Dainty Dimities and Flowered Organdies Will be Popular.

Like a breath of summer are the new cotton fabrics which are appearing in the shops to cheer womankind during these disagreeable wintry days. There is a great variety of materials displayed, beautiful to look upon and not too expensive to own.

A charmingly fresh looking dimity may be bought for 15 cents a yard, while the organdies, which are the work of artists, sell at only 50 cents a yard. They are of web-like texture and are scattered with exquisitely colored clusters of flowers. Occasionally the pattern is one large single blossom. The organdies are made up over silk or sateen. They are trimmed with lace or Dresden ribbons matching in design and color the flower of the organdie.

A quaint and charming way of making a summer gown is shown in the illustration. The material is white organdie flowered with pansy blossoms. The gown is made over white sateen, though a much better effect is attained if the foundation is violet silk. Valenciennes lace is used as the trimming and the quaint kerchief is of white mousseline de soie, edged with a narrow frill of lace.

RUSSEL SAGE SCORED.

Joseph Choate Turns the Shafts of Satire Upon the Modern Shylock.

Mr. Choate was not in his usual humor when he began to sum up the case of William G. Laidlaw against Russel Sage for $50,000 damages for injuries sustained by the explosion of dynamite in Sage's office three years ago, when Norcross dropped a bomb upon being refused a satchel full of money by the astute old Wall street sharp.

Mr. Choate said: The counsel for the defense has admitted that Laidlaw honestly believed in his narration of what occurred in connection with the explosion. I won't give Mr. Sage the benefit of any such admission on my part. Mr. Sage has been engaged for years in a calling which hardens the heart and blunts the moral sense. He is a money lender, a note shaver, a stock gambler. He says to this man "go," and he goeth; to this broker "come," and he cometh, and to this banker "shell out," and he shelleth. It is an honest man on one side and a dishonest man on the other—confessedly so.

Sage sat looking at Choate without a wince. Choate went over near him and talked down at him as he shook his hand almost in the face of Sage, and said:

There was not a twitch of a feature of Sage at this or when Choate fell back, and still pointing at him said:

"Oh, he knows he owes his life to Laidlaw. He spoke the truth in the drug store. Every one knows it who has heard the testimony in the case. Sage was the only one who was not seriously injured by the explosion. Why, he was shaving himself at the end of the fourth day, and beginning to shave others again at the end of ten days! Look at him! Seventy-eight years old, and keener than the average man on this jury. He wasn't hurt at all. I appeal to these immortal trousers and the debris of the coat tails which were mixed up with the debris of the table on which Sage gently subsided."

Mr. Choate then swung the trousers which Sage had worn that day. He said it was not possible to account for the want of injury to Sage except on the supposition that the missiles which would have gone to him had struck Laidlaw. Mr. Choate turned and said: "This trial is not between Sage and this poor man Laidlaw. It has become a trial between Sage and the Judges and courts of this State. I have been often asked how I can afford to spend my time on this case in behalf of this penniless man when the compensation is so little commensurate with the labor. They are trying to tire him out by appeal. I'll stand by him if it takes twenty trials before this man Sage is brought to the bar of justice."

There was applause, but Justice Patterson said he would punish any person for contempt who applauded.

"Thank God," said Mr. Choate when running over the evidence, "there are some members of the bar that this man of millions has not got under his control. People are afraid of this man of millions. Witnesses are afraid to come into court against him."

Mr. Choate said that the action would die with the death of either Laidlaw or Sage, and that Sage "would spend many thousands of his ill-gotten millions" to win the case. He had retained an astute lawyer, who had loaded the case down with exceptions for another appeal.

TROTTING TRACK FOR A PONY.

The Unusual Conceit of a Wealthy Man in Brooklyn.

A wealthy Brooklyn man recently built a handsome residence in a densely populated part of the city. His action created considerable surprise among his friends, as the structure he erected would have been an ornament to the most fashionable neighborhood in the city.

It adjoined a coal yard, while directly opposite it are a number of ramshackled frame buildings, each one of which provides homes for half a dozen families. The man's next move was to purchase and then tear down one of these houses and erect a fine red brick stable in its place. His last action, however, has stamped him as a really eccentric character.

He purchased the coal yard behind his house, tore down the fences, and then had the place levelled off. Then he had a small trotting track laid out. The remainder of the ground he had sodded with the finest grass obtainable, and then an iron fence was erected, through which the whole of the interior is visible. The trotting track is a most diminutive affair, but amply large for the purpose for which it was laid out, which is the amusement of the man's nine-year-old son.

This lad owns a pretty little Shetland pony, which he rides like an expert, and any fine afternoon he may be seen tearing around the track at a great rate. The other children in the neighborhood gather around the fence and watch him enviously.

Occasionally he invites one of them in and gives him a ride around the track on his pony. He is a manly little fellow, and makes a pretty figure with his brown leather leggins as he urges on his pony. It is a strange sight in what is recognized as one of the poorer sections of the city, and sometimes as many as two hundred people may be seen watching him through the fence.

A Question of Balances.

The French-Canadians are not without a considerable sense of humor, and they highly appreciate the following story, told of a prosperous baker in a town not far from Quebec.

The baker was in the habit of buying his butter in pound balls or rolls, from a farmer with whom he did a great deal of business. Noticing that these butter balls looked rather small, he weighed them, and found that they were all under a pound in weight.

Thereupon he had the farmer brought before the magistrate and accused of dishonest practices.

"These butter balls," said the judge to the farmer, "certainly weigh less than a pound. Have you any scales?"

"I have," answered the farmer.

"And have you weights?"

"No, no weights."

"Then how can you weigh your butter balls?"

"That's very simple," said the farmer; "while I've been selling the baker butter, I've been buying pound loaves of bread from him, and I used them for weights on my scales!"

A Virtue of It.

Pertly—There is one thing I have to say in favor of the wind when it whistles.

Dullhead—What's that?

Pertly—It never whistles popular airs.—Harper's Bazar.

BORN JOURNALIST.

The city editor opened the door and peered impatiently through the clouds of smoke rolling up over the long centre table in the reporters' room.

"Did you get that story, Carlton?" he asked.

"Carlton not in yet, Mr. Howard," one of the men replied. "He——"

But the door shut with a bang to open a minute later, when the same worried voice inquired:

"Where's Bud? No. I suppose he isn't to be found either! Did anybody know him to be on hand when he was wanted. Here, Bud," as the grimy-faced galley and general-utility boy in question came in with his proofs, "go down to the foot of F street and find Carlton. There's a wreck off the point, but it won't do us any good unless he gets here with that copy pretty soon. We go to press at 3 o'clock—in just two hours. Bud——"

He stopped with a half-smile, for the boy was already part way down stairs on his way to the street.

None knew exactly why he gave the weird, shriveled specimen of boyhood the name of Bud. Possibly it was because of the certainty we felt that he would become a blossom. He was a thin-shouldered, shrunken-chested little fellow, small even for his twelve years, with a sharp-featured, unchildish face, and the suggestion of eternal croup in his voice. He had drifted into the office one stormy night about a year before the time of which I write, and although his request for a place had been promptly refused, he had calmly stayed on and became a fixture.

He was not communicative about himself, and we were not particularly curious. One of the women proofreaders discovered before long that the gray rat under her desk was not a more constant habitude of the office than was Bud. He spent the hours between the time the paper went to press and the arrival of the day men at 11 o'clock sleeping on a pile of empty mailsacks in dark corner of the engine room, but from that time on he was alert and ready for business.

As understudy for Frank, the regular galley boy, he was fast picking up a knowledge of printing, and had occasionally displayed a surprising amount of information regarding the general make-up of a newspaper, strongly imbued with the idea that all things were secondary in importance and must be subservient to its requirements.

Nothing pleased him so much as an errand of the kind just given him by the city editor, and we all knew he would return on time if he was alive.

Carlton was a new man on the paper, a little green in the business, but with a "nose for news," and a sense of honor and the eternal fitness of things, coupled with reliability of statement. Mr. Howard had looked over his staff that night before giving his assignment.

"Go to that wreck, Carlton," he said. "You are the only man here that can write it up without having the waves roll mountain high."

And the new reporter had torn a thick section from the block of copy paper and hurried away. Bud found no difficulty in locating the wreck, although he could see its dark spars outlined against the sky much better by running along the water front as far as H street. The storm which had been raging for three days and had finally caused the disaster, had subsided a little, and from his distance the great black hulk seemed resting easily upon the waves.

On account of the hour there were but few spectators—only the hurring life crews, the patrolmen and the inevitable group of wharf-rats. Bud observed, with delight, that not another paper had a reporter on the scene. He looked around for Carlton, and some one told him that the "chap" that had been writing there for a long time, sitting on an overturned small boat, had at last righted the small craft and set off for the half-submerged ship.

"He hadn't oughter, either," the man continued. "This water ain't as peaceful as it looks. We had a hard pull gettin' in the last trip with the passengers, and the wind is rising higher every minute."

It was true that the clouds had begun to roll again, while the lightning threw even sharper and more jagged fangs across the sky. The crew on shore made hasty preparations to put out. There were still many people aboard the wreck—a number of them women and children. Bud was the first one in the boat.

"Come out of that, youngster," said a sailor. "Be quick with you!"

"I'm going," cried the boy. "I've got to see Carlton—I've got to—I tell you!"

"I've got to get something for the paper!" and his voice rose to a shrill scream.

The man lifted him out, sat him not ungently down on the wet sand, and pushed off the boat. With a fierce cry the boy was after him, clinging like a monkey to its side. The sailor loosened the boy's hands and he dropped backward into the water. He scrambled to the shore, and stood choking with impotent rage, strange oaths pouring from his lips and his frail hands beating the air.

The wind increased in violence. The thunder was terrific, and the heavens were cut with broad, white blades. The night grew ever blacker, but he could see by the flashes that the lifeboat rolled heavily and seemed in distress. He sank down and dug his hands deep into the sand. All at once a peal of thunder shook the solid earth; a flash of lightning leaped down and seemed to lap up the sea and ships. Bud uncovered his eyes, and in a moment his shrill voice was added to the chorus of agony sent up from among the flames of the fatal steamer. Lightning had struck her, and the boy had heard the sailors say that she carried a consignment of coal oil.

The light was bright enough now, and the watchers could see a small dark object leave her luminous side and head towards shore. It was the small boat. Bud screamed in ecstasy as he saw a man, Carlton, work at the oars. The time seemed an eternity, and the boat, overcrowded as it was with women and children, seemed to make no progress. It was in danger of swamping. How long before the explosion must occur? The boy threw himself face downward upon the beach again and waited. Presently he lifted his eyes, and saw the man in the boat rise and gently put back the hands that were extended towards him, as if in entreaty, and then with a long leap spring into the ocean. Bud saw him strike out with strong, confident strokes, while the boat, relieved of its weight, made a leap forward. Then there was a sudden darkening of the sky, as the flames swirled downward, followed by a long, reverberating shock and roar; a glare that turned the heavens into fire, while the waves hissed around the scene, with the foam at their lips stained red.

There was a hurrying back and forth along the shore; the whirling of long ropes, lasso-like, over the waters, and, after awhile, a few charred, blackened shapes upon the beach.

Bud opened the office door at half-past two o'clock.

"This is a nice time for you to to turn up," growled the city editor. "Where's Carlton? Did you get that copy?"

Bud approached the table slowly, and fumbled in his coat with trembling hands.

"I've brought the copy," he said, his lips drawn and ashen. "It's a little wet 'cause 'twas in his pocket, an'"—the boy put his hand up to his throat and sobbed hoarsely—"You see, he—got drowned."

JAPAN'S GREAT RESOURCES.

Money, Arms and Men Supplied at the Call of the Mikado.

The special correspondent of the London Times with the Japanese forces, writing on board the transport, Masayoshi-Maru, says:

"The Japanese Government is in the most matter-of-fact way preparing for the moment when China shall no longer assert her authority, maintain order, and protect life and property in the North. Already many of the European residents are clearing out, but the Japanese Government is preparing and will undertake the whole responsibility of administering the government and maintaing order for the time being.

"Nor will the Europeans, with their commercial interests, be at the tender mercies of Japanese military officers, for a large staff of experienced men from the Civil Service, Foreign Office and other departments are under orders, and some are already with the army. It is even hinted that the Parliament, now temporarily located at Hiroshima, may have to go across the water; there is nothing in the constitution to prevent the Japanese Government being entirely located in Pekin.

"In reference to the supposed exhaution of the country by the war it should be noted the money already voted—say £20,000,000 sterling—will mostly not go out of the country at all, but will only circulate the more; and as prices are so cheap these £20,000,000 will go much further than they would in England toward paying the bill. The only item of any importance that Japan has still to get from Europe is the heavier work for big ships and big guns—sixty-five tons and so on. Of these she has enough in stock to refit her navy if the Chinese made that necessary.

"Japan makes all her own rifles and cartridges at Osaka; the Murata magazine rifle is pronounced by European experts a splendid weapon, and is the sole invention of a Japanese, Count Murata. The ammunition in stock, according to official reports early in the year, was sufficient to give 240,000 men ten rounds a day for three years, without making any more. China has undoubtedly been importing arms and ammunition in breach of the Neutrality law; but the Japanese simply laugh, and call it so much more booty for the victors; they cannot import courage."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE HOME.

Dedication of the "First Church of Christ, Scientist."

Christian Scientists from various parts of the United States were present at the dedication of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

The dedication was simple. It included an organ voluntary, singing of hymns two of which were written by the "Mother Rev," Mary Baker Eddy; the reading of the Scriptures, with extracts from "Science and Health, the Key to the Scriptures." Mrs. Henrietta Clarke Bemis of Allston, read the sermon written by the mother pastor.

Mrs. Eddy is regarded as the sole discoverer of Christian Science. It has grown to the extent of representation in every State and in every city of importance in the Union and in Canada, and it has extended its influence as far north as Norway and as far south as Greece and Australia. The local church in Boston is estimated to have not less than 3,000 members. Two hundred thousand followers are said to hold services in the branch churches of the denomination, and half a million persons, the Scientists assert, stand ready to testify of marvellous healing through the understanding of Christian Science.

In testimonial of their gratitude to its founder, the followers of Mrs. Eddy have contributed to the building of the commodious church which was dedicated recently. The ground, edifice, and its equipment are valued at $250,000.

Decidedly the most novel feature of the church is the second story of the tower, devoted to the Mother's room. A wide vestibule and a flight of three steps lead to it from the auditorium. The room is decorated in white, pale green, and gold, with a rich mosaic floor, a pale green onyx fireplace and mantel. It is the gift of several thousand little children known as the "Busy Bees," who have been taught in Christian Science. Above the door on a marble tablet, is the word love. A lamp two hundred years old which came from Athens, will be kept burning night and day.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Thin-legged, thin-chested, slight unspeakably,
Neat-footed and weak-fingered: in his face
Lean, large-boned, curved of beak, and touched with race.
Bold-lipped, rich-tinted, mutable as the sea,
The brown eyes radiant with vivacity,
There shone a brilliant and romantic grace,
A spirit intense and rare, with trace on trace
Of passion, impudence and energy.
Valiant in velvet, light in ragged luck,
Most vain, most generous, sternly critical,
Buffoon and poet, lover and sensualist;
A deal of Ariel, just a streak of Puck,
Much Antony, of Hamlet most of all,
And something of the Shorter-Catechist.

FRANK AMES' DISCOVERY.

In the afternoon of the following day the body of Charlotte Warren was committed to the tomb.

Detective Mulligan—whose total lack of Irish characteristics suggested that he could find another name for himself by looking in his family Bible—held what he called a conference, after the funeral. Nobody else was present. He opened the discussion by remarking to himself that Charlotte beat any woman he ever knew for keeping a secret.

"Never did I see a corpse that had less to say," he remarked. "She walked a considerable distance through the snow, and got her dress and her shoes wet, and then she partially dried them before a hot fire (her dress is scorched a bit) and that's all I know about what she did in this town."

The fire he surmised to have been that which had burned in the room where Ned Ames' body, or at least his coffin, had lain on Thursday night. But that was guesswork. He had failed to find any trace of the girl's presence in or about the Ames house. If she had approached the house in the usual way, her footprints had been obliterated by those of the crowd that had attended the funeral. If she had approached in any other way, he could not find out what it was.

There was also the puzzle of the weapon which had made such a peculiar wound. He had searched the Ames house twice openly and once secretly and had failed to find anything in it which would answer the requirements of the case.

By careful questioning of Horace Riddle he had located the spot in the woods where the boy had seen Ned Ames—or thought that he had seen him—but the detective had not succeeded in getting a clew at that point which would guide him a single inch in the direction which the hunted criminal had taken.

It must be remembered that the capture of Ned Ames was desired for a double reason. Mulligan had been pursuing him for weeks as one of the shrewdest active operators in a league of high-grade thieves which had given the Boston police no end of trouble. Even if innocent of the murder, the young man's liberty was forfeit to the law. In view of these facts Mulligan decided to try it again in the woods, on a somewhat different "lay."

Rev. Mr. Warren had formed a very high opinion of Mulligan's abilities, and he believed that big, hearty, pleasant-faced man, so different from the detective of romance, concealed the spirit of the bloodhound in his heart, and would yet track the criminal down. The clergyman grew impatient whenever Mulligan was out of his sight. He wished to know every new fact the instant it was brought to light. Only by concentrating his mind upon the problem of detection could he keep his grief within bounds. Blessed is he who has work to do at such a time. Early in the evening Frank Ames called upon Mr. Warren, whom he found pacing his study in eager expectation of a visit from the detective. Frank brought painful news. His mother had not rallied from the shock of the terrible scene at the grave. On the contrary, her endurance had been so seriously overtaxed that, at her time of life, the gravest results were to be feared. She lay ill, and had relapsed into a merciful unconsciousness of her sorrow. In Dr. Maxwell's absence there was no competent physician in Williston, and it had been necessary to telegraph for one who lived in the Junction. He had not then arrived. There never is any lack of good nursing in a New England town, however, and Samuel Ames had found abundant help for the bedside of his wife.

On hearing this news, the clergyman thought it his duty to go at once to Mr. Ames' house. Frank remained with Anna Warren.

At such a time, when the whole village fairly throbbed with excitement, it may not be a matter for wonder that Frank Ames displayed agitation. Yet Anna, who was at tremendous nervous tension herself, could not help remarking upon the condition of her companion. The pallor of his face was heightened by his heavy brows and black mustache. His hands trembled. He paced the little parlor in the manner of one tortured by the most harrowing thoughts.

"The sight of you," said Anna, "makes me regard myself as a marvel of self-control."

He wheeled about suddenly, and faced her.

"And the sight of you," he said, "makes me lose what little self-control I had before."

His tone frightened her. She asked him with a trembling voice what he meant by that.

"Anna," he said, approaching her, "we have been friends a good many years. I remember you almost from the day when you were born, and I have watched you grow year by year into the beautiful woman that you are to-night. How have you regarded me?"

"As a friend, certainly," said Anna. "Have you ever had cause to think otherwise?"

"I'm afraid not," he replied, while his lips quivered.

"Upon my word I do not understand you," cried the girl.

"If you could see my heart—but there, I frighten you. Yet I can't help it. I have that to say to you to-night which demands that both of us should be stronger than human flesh and blood can be. Something has happened; something that you do not suspect—any more than I did a few hours ago. I believe that it gives me an opportunity such as a thousand lives, if I might live them one after another on this earth, would not bring—the opportunity of serving you in an emergency involving awful risks and the most harrowing difficulty."

He spoke wildly, yet with such evident, deep purpose that the girl was startled into calmness. There is such a possibility, though few there be who are ever called upon to know it by actual experience.

"Tell me exactly what you mean," she said, and the steadiness of her tone amazed him.

"You love Robert Maxwell?"

"How can you ask me that? I am to be his wife."

"I know that, but in this modern life it means little. Do you love him enough to do him any service that one human being can do another? Do you love him as I love you? Stop! This is no time to evade and disguise the truth. Hear me out. When I tell you what I propose to do for you my disclosure will have to be made. You will know that no motive of human conduct save love alone is strong enough to account for it. I have said it, and there is an end. And now for him. Does your love answer the test?"

"I believe," said the girl firmly, "that there is nothing he could ask of me that I would not do."

"He cannot ask it. You must do it without the asking. You must serve him at your own cost, and at your own risk, and at once."

"What does he require of me?"

"Surely you must suspect."

"I cannot guess your meaning."

"Where is he now?"

"You know well enough. He is in Boston doing his best to solve the mystery of my sister's death."

"Can you believe it? Do you not see that his sudden departure is a flight? Not a word! You must hear me. Who resisted to the utmost the opening of that coffin? Who has been most diligent in casting suspicion upon my brother? Who, at the disclosure of the secret of that grave which so nearly closed over the most horrible of crimes, was the first to leave this place? Already the detective suspects him, but it has been reserved for me to find the absolute proof of his guilt."

He spoke with such appalling conviction, that his words froze the heart of the girl. Yet she found strength to say:

"I do not believe it."

"Let us not waste time. Supposing I convinced even you; supposing that you could not longer doubt; would you deliver him up to justice or would you save him?"

"You cannot do it—. Stay! I will answer your question. I would save him."

"At what cost?"

"At any cost."

They faced each other with such intensity of deadly earnestness, that each felt the other's thought as if it had been a magnetic force throbbing in the air between them.

"At the cost of yourself?" he demanded.

Again that awful calmness settled upon her.

"I know now what you mean," she said. "You have discovered strong evidence of Robert's guilt—enough, doubtless, to satisfy you. In connection with the old slander that joined his name with my sister's ruin, and, supported by the strange fatality of his conduct, you think that conviction would follow. You have doubtless discovered what I know, namely, that his whereabouts on Thursday night cannot be proven, because he was driving alone on the road that leads toward Lincoln. So the case stands, and you propose to me that you will hide the evidence which you possess if I will promise to marry you, as the price of it."

He bowed his head.

"What is your evidence?"

"If it is conclusive, have I your promise?"

"If it is conclusive to whom?"

"To you."

"I am to be judge and jury—to convict him and sentence myself?"

He winced, but recovering himself instantly, answered firmly:

"Yes; I trust wholly in your word."

"You have it. Now for your evidence. I have no fear of it."

"Wait till you have heard. You know that I suspected him from the first. Besides that, I believed that my brother had really died and that his body was in the coffin that I brought here with me. I think there is no doubt that these facts will be established on investigation. You must know I had some evidence of his death before I left Boston. Against it is only Horace Riddle's story, which you know to be worth nothing.

"The case stood thus with me, and I was confronted by the problem of the disappearance of my brother's body. I believe—in fact, I now know—that it was taken from the coffin and your sister's substituted. Her full story I cannot pretend to read, but the detective will do that. My attempt was to find my brother's body, and I have succeeded!"

To say that Anna Warren heard this statement with calmness would be to pass the bounds of reason. Her heart seemed to stop. Even a woman may doubt, though ordinarily she is spared that misery by the absence of logic.

This disclosure removed Edward Ames from the field of conjecture. The man whom she had believed to be guilty had proven an alibi measurable only by the distance between this world and the next. Having been mistaken in what she held to be practically certain, her faith in all things was shaken—which is the way with women at such exceptional moments. But faith reasserted itself. As yet she had had no proof. The mere finding of the body could not convict her lover.

Yet she shuddered at the question which she must ask next, and her lips moved almost without sound.

"Where was it?"

"In the old Maxwell house on High street," he replied. "It is there now."

Her face was like a mask of white marble. She put her hand on his arm.

"Come," she said; "I must see it with my own eyes."

VERTICAL PENMANSHIP.

Its Many Advantages Over the Slanting Style. To be Adopted in Boston.

To the casual observer there appears to be little importance in the movement to substitute vertical for slant writing. But to the Board of Supervisors for the Boston public schools it presents itself as a matter of weighty import. In a recent report this Board exhaustively discusses the subject of penmanship in the public schools. They say that the question of vertical versus slant writing has been under investigation and discussed for about three decades; that it has been from the first not a question of taste, but of hygiene; that it grew out of inquiries into the causes of physical defects among school children in various European countries. The report goes on to state, in effect, that vertical handwriting was decided to be a remedy for some of the defects; that it has the endorsement of various international hygienic congresses, and that it is rapidly supplanting slant writing all over Europe. The physical defects referred to are said to have been aggrevated by ill-adapted desks and the unnatural and wearying positions which the children were required to assume. The Supervisors are opposed to the use of slates in the primary grades of the public schools.

It is not only a hygienic, but an art improvement, according to the Boston Board, to do away with slant writing. They find that the vertical writing of experts and of school children of all ages is more legible than the slant, and this fact commends it to business men as well as to printers.—Washington Post.
